

72-
THE

POPE OF ROME

AND THE

POPE OF THE ORIENTAL ORTHODOX CHURCH:

By the same Author.

ESSAYS ON THE RELIGIOUS QUESTION OF RUSSIA.

May, 1875.

I.

LA PRIMAUTÉ DE ST. PIERRE PROUVÉE PAR LES
TITRES QUE LUI DONNE L'ÉGLISE RUSSE DANS SA LITURGIE.
Paris : Palmé, 1867.

II.

THE POPE OF ROME AND THE POPES OF THE ORIENTAL ORTHODOX CHURCH. 2nd Edition, London :
Washbourne, 1875.

The same in French.—Le Pape de Rome et les Papes de l'Eglise Orthodoxe d'Orient.—Paris : Plon, 1875. (Nearly ready.)

To this edition is appended : La prière et l'appui du S. Siège et de l'Episcopat dans l'œuvre de la réunion des Eglises.

The same in German.—Der römische Papst und die Päpste der Orthodoxen Orientalischen Kirche. (In press.)

III.

L'AVENIR DE L'ÉGLISE RUSSE. Paris : librairie de la Société bibliographique, 35, Rue de Grenelle ; London :
Burns and Oates ; Bruxelles : Goemaere, 1875.

The same in English.—The Future of the Russian Church.—New York : Catholic Publication Society ; London : Pickering.
(In press.)

This work has already appeared translated into English in the New Catholic World of New York. (Jan., Feb., March, April, 1875).

The same in Italian.—L'Avvenire della Chiesa russa.—Prato, Ranieri-Guasti, 1875. (Nearly ready.)

The same in Polish. (In press.)

IV.

LE RÈGLEMENT ECCLÉSIASTIQUE DE PIERRE LE
GRAND, TRADUIT EN FRANÇAIS SUR LE RUSSE, AVEC INTRO-DUCTION ET NOTES. Edition accompagnée de la traduction latine imprimée à St. Petersburg en 1785, par les soins du Prince Grégoire Potemkin, DU TEXTE RUSSE ORIGINAL et de L'INSTRUCTION DU PROCUREUR SUPRÊME DU SYNODE.
Paris : librairie de la Société bibliogr., 35, Rue de Grenelle ;
London : Burns and Oates ; Bruxelles : Goemaere, 1874.

V.

(Suggested by Mr. Gladstone's Expostulation.)

ANGLICANISM, OLD-CATHOLICISM AND THE UNION OF THE CHRISTIAN EPISCOPAL CHURCHES. (Ready for press.)

THE
POPE OF ROME

AND THE
POPE OF THE ORIENTAL ORTHODOX CHURCH:

AN ESSAY ON MONARCHY IN THE CHURCH,

WITH SPECIAL REFERENCE TO

RUSSIA,

FROM ORIGINAL DOCUMENTS, RUSSIAN AND GREEK.

BY THE

REV. CÆSARIUS TONDINI,

BARNABITE.

".. Of these early provisions for a balance of Church power and for securing the laity against sacerdotal domination, the rigid conservatism of the Eastern Church presents us, even down to the present day, with an authentic and living record."—GLADSTONE, Vaticanism, p. 119.

Second Edition,

WITH A LETTER OF MGR. MERMILLOD, A SPECIAL PREFACE, AND AN APPENDIX.

LONDON:
R. WASHBOURNE, 18 PATERNOSTER ROW.
1875.

ECCLESIASTICAL APPROBATION PREFIXED TO THE FIRST EDITION.

---

NIHIL OBSTAT.

Thomas F. Knox, Cong. Orat.,
Censor deputatus.

IMPRIMATUR.

✝ HENRICUS EDUARDUS,
Archiep. Westmonast.

Die 5 Julii, 1871.

LETTER FROM MGR. MERMILLOD TO THE AUTHOR.

Fernex, 23rd October, 1874.

FEAST OF THE MOST HOLY REDEEMER.

DEAR REVEREND FATHER,

YOUR publications and your zeal testify amply that you belong to that family of Barnabites, which, under St. Paul's patronage, labours in the great and noble service of the Church. You continue her traditions ; like those pious and learned men, Cardinals Gerdil, Fontana, Lambruschini, without naming the living, you bring to the defence of truth and the conquest of souls, high learning, literary merit, firmness, and moderation.

Your taste has directed your studies towards the religious position of Russia and of England ; you have divined that a consoling future is there reserved for the Church. Our Holy Father, the august Pius IX., in the Brief which he addressed to the members of your Congregation, to congratulate them on having organized an Association of prayers for the conversion of Russia, appears to have had a glimpse of the blessing of approaching religious unity. We do well to repeat it : in spite of coalesced passions and the passing triumphs of force, truth is making her way among souls and nations ; we are confident that the present century will not close without welcoming the dawn of that day which will see "one fold under one Shepherd."

I congratulate you on your allying united and persevering prayer to scientific research ; the remarkable works you have already published in English and French contain undeniable proofs of the authentic characters, reserved to the Catholic Church, of Pontifical unity and supremacy. You give prominence to irrefutable proofs of the divine institution of the Papacy, its permanence throughout all ages, and its necessity. The East has yielded up to you the secrets of its traditions, and shaking off the dust from many an old volume, you have gathered together and brought to light documents whose value and authenticity none can dispute.

Not confining yourself to grouping together luminous texts, you investigate the intellectual state of heretical and schismatical nations, and you arrive at the conclusion already expressed by M. de Maistre, that every schismatic Church is Protestant, each of them bearing on its banner, "Every enemy of Rome is my friend."

It is easy to perceive that the essence of heresy is the considering of religious truth as an opinion or a sentiment ; doctrinal anarchy is its final result, and in order to escape this it seeks an artificial unity under the shelter of despotism, or a factitious religious peace in Methodistical aspirations.

Many minds suffer from this situation ; Ritualism is a feeble effort to attain life, but its sanctuaries remain cold and empty, because there is no life where there is no truth.

May my humble suffrage, Reverend Father, my liveliest sympathies, be a support to you in your labours ; your writings form one of the most useful and opportune apologies of Catholicism, after the great act of the Vatican Council.

Accept, my dear Reverend Father, my thanks, and the assurance of my respectful affection in our Lord.

✠ GASPARD, BISHOP OF HEBRON,

Vicar Apostolic of Geneva.

AUTHOR'S PREFACE TO THE SECOND EDITION.

---

THE immense circulation which Mr. Gladstone's late publications have had, is likely to have given some popularity to the following statement which we find in the last of them :

"The propagation of the Gospel was committed to an organized society ; but in the constitution of that society, as we learn alike from Scripture and from history, the rights of all its orders were well distributed and guaranteed. Of these early provisions for a balance of Church power, and for securing the laity against sacerdotal domination, the rigid conservatism of the Eastern Church presents us, even down to the present day, with an authentic and living record." GLADSTONE (Vaticanism, p. 119).

Thus, thanks to Mr. Gladstone, the English public will find some interest in learning the actual organization of the Eastern Church. This work sets forth at length the valuable provisions alluded to by Mr. Gladstone. There is much to be learned from them, especially if we take into consideration their recent date, and the ecclesiastical canons, of which the Eastern Church has not been, indeed, a rigid conservator.

The last remark was already made some two hundred years ago, by the Russian Patriarch Nikon (+ 1681), in his: Replies against the Questions of the Boyar Simeon Streshneff and the answers of the Metropolitan of Gaza Païsios Ligarides.* Curious enough! in the XXIVth of these Replies, the Patriarch goes so far as to copy, as it were, the Bull Unam Sanctam of Boniface VIII., together with its conclusion. Of course, Nikon could not speak of the Pope, but, instead of the Pope, he mentions the local Bishop. "If all Christians," he says, "are bound to be obedient to the Bishop, how much more must not he (the Tsar), who with the sword forces others that are disobedient into obedience to the Bishop, be bound to show obedience?" (p. 255.) We are not willing to enter into comments of any kind, we confine ourselves to stating the opinion of the great Russian Patriarch on the balance of Church power.

When the first edition of this book appeared in 1871, Mr. H. N. Oxenham kindly stated in The Academy that "our argument is based on a careful analysis of facts derived from original sources, which are here, for the first time, brought together within so small a compass." And again: "The real interest of Tondini's book lies, not in his theological opinions or even in his controversial application of the argument, but in the mass of statistics not generally accessible which he has collected in a brief and readable volume. For controversial purposes it should be read in connexion with such works as Janus or Schulte's Die Stellung von Concilien, Päbsten und Bischöfen." (The Academy, May 1, 1872.)

* Translated from the Russ, by WILLIAM PALMER, M.A., late Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford; London, Trübner and Co., 1871.—We have profited by this work for commenting on the Spiritual Regulation of Peter the Great, with the words of Nikon himself. See our "Règlement ecclésiastique de Pierre le Grand." Paris, 1874. London: Burns and Oates. Introd. pp. viii. xxxvi. and the notes to the first part, p. 15—32.

Unless, then, some new book, bearing on the constitution of the Oriental Orthodox Church, has appeared in England since May, 1872, we have the right to think that the present work will continue to save time and researches to any inquirer after the reason why the civil and ecclesiastical power keep such a wonderful peace in the East.

As for our theological opinions and the controversial application of our argument, what has happened in the Orthodox Church since 1871 seems to us to have but confirmed them both. The Bulgarian question was settled, not in any canonical way, but by the intervention of the Sultan; the Patriarch of Constantinople protested in vain. A great Council assembled at Constantinople in August and September, 1872, excommunicated the Bulgarians, and, adding a new dogmatical definition to those already issued by the first seven Œcumenical Councils, condemned the phyletism, that is, the application of the principle of nationalities to the external government of the Church, as "contrary to the teaching of the Gospel and the holy canons of the Fathers."*—We were far from thinking, in 1871, that the third chapter of the present book and its conclusion would receive such a solemn approbation as that of the Orthodox Council of Constantinople!

* " ... 'Αποκηρύττομεν κατακρίνοντας καὶ καταδικάζοντας τὸν φυλετισμὸν, τοῦτέστι τὰς φυλετικὰς διακρίσεις καὶ τὰς ἐθνικὰς ἔρεις καὶ ζήλους καὶ διχο-

The decree of this Council was treated with the utmost contempt by the Bulgarians, who had rejected the jurisdiction of the Patriarch of Constantinople. In The future of the Russian Church* we have dwelt with some length on this decree or definition; here we only remark that, according to it, a large portion, at least, of the Russian Church seems to be excommunicated because of their supporting the rebellious Bulgarian Bishops.† In fact, even before the excommunication was finally pronounced, the celebrated Russian writer, Nicholas Muravieff, foreseeing the logical result of the step which the Council was going to take, asked the Patriarch of Constantinople: "Whether Russia was then no more necessary to the East, and what he thought would become of the Orthodox Church if fifteen millions of Slavonians and sixty millions of Russians were thus cut off from the Church, and, finally, whether it is the part one cuts off from the whole, or the whole from the part." "This brings to στασίας ἐν τῇ τοῦ Χριστοῦ Ἐκκλησίᾳ, ὡς ἀντικείμενον τῇ διδασκαλίᾳ τοῦ Εὐαγγελίου καὶ τοῖς ἱεροῖς κανόσι τῶν μακαρίων πατέρων ἡμῶν."

---

* L'Avenir de l'Eglise russe, Paris, 1874. London: Burns and Oates, p. 55—61. The future of the Russian Church in the New Catholic World of New York, March, 1875, p. 816—819.

† The words of the decree are very plain: "... καὶ πάντας τοὺς κοινωνοῦντας καὶ συμφρονοῦντας καὶ συμπράττοντας αὐτοῖς, κ' ἰ τοὺς δεχομένους ὡς κυρίας καὶ κανονικὰς τὰς ἀνιέρους αὐτῶν ἐυλογίας τε καὶ ἱεροπραξίας, κληρικούς τε καὶ λαϊκοὺς κηρύττομεν ΣΧΙΣΜΑΤΙΚΟΥΣ καὶ ἀλλοτρίους τῆς τοῦ Χριστοῦ Ὁρθοδόξου Ἐκκλησίας."—"Ὁρος τῆς ἀγίας καὶ μεγάλης Συνόδου, etc.

mind," added the Russian writer, "the parable of the Gospel. What king, is there said, about to go to make war against another king, doth not first sit down and think whether he be able with ten thousand to meet him that with twenty thousand cometh against him? Or else, whilst the other is yet afar off, sending an embassy, he desireth conditions of peace." (Luke xiv. 31, 32.)* To this the Patriarch calmly replied, after the excommunication was pronounced, that by no means did he intend to make war against the Russian Church, that most honourable and illustrious daughter in whom the great Church (of Constantinople) glories, etc. "Yet the Church," he added, "is there where truth is kept entire and unstained, independently of the numerical proportions of the faithful."†

Again, we were, in 1871, far from thinking that our theological argument would receive, within one year, such an historical sanction as this.

* "... Δέν θέλει εἶναι ἄρα πάλιν ἀναγκαία ἡ Ῥωσσία διὰ τὴν Ἀνατολήν; ... Ἀλλὰ μὲ ποῖον μένουσι 5 ἑκατομύρια Ἑλλήνων, περιλαμβανομένων τοῦ τε Ἑλληνικοῦ βασιλείου καὶ τῶν νήσων αὐτῶν, ἀν χωρισθῶσιν ἀπὸ 15 ἑκατομμυρίων Σλάβων καὶ 60 ἑκατομμυρίων Ῥωσσων; Τί ἀπὸ τίνος ἀποκόπτεται, τὸ μέρος ἀπὸ τοῦ ὅλου, ἢ τὸ ὅλον ἀπὸ τοῦ μέρους; Τοῦτο ἐνθυμίζει τὴν παραβολὴν τοῦ Εὐαγγελίου· εἰ τις βασιλεὺς κ. τ.λ." Letter dated Kieff, Aug. 14, 1872. We copy from the Greek newspaper Καιροί of Athens, Oct. 25, 1872.

† "... Ἀλλ' ἡμεῖς κατ' οὐδενὸς φέρομεν πόλεμον, ἥκιστα δὲ πρὸς τοὺς ἀδελφοὺς ἡμῶν, καὶ μάλιστα πρὸς τὴν Ῥωσσικὴν Ἐκκλησίαν, ἐφ' ᾗ ὡς ἐπὶ παντίμῃ καὶ σεπτῇ θυγατρὶ ἐγκauχόμενῃ ἡ Μεγάλῃ τοῦ Χριστοῦ Ἐκκλησία κ. τ. λ.... Ἐν αὐτῇ (τῇ Ἐκκλησίᾳ) τὸ ὅλον ἐκεῖ ἐστὶν ὅπου καὶ ἡ ἀλήθεια διατηρεῖται ὁλόκληρος καὶ ἀλώβητος, ἀδιάφορον, ἀν ἐν αὐτῇ περιέχεται πληθὺς λίαν εὐάρισμος." Letter dated Sept. 16, 1872. Id.—We abstain from quoting what, at that time, the Greek newspapers said about the most honourable and illustrious daughter of the Church of Constantinople.

In order that what we say concerning the mutual independence of the two powers, and the conduct of the Popes in the government of the Church, be not attributed to the recent controversy, we beg to remark that nothing, in this second edition, has been changed from what is to be found in the first edition (London, Longmans, 1871), which appeared with the ecclesiastical approbation.

TO
CHARLES DU GARD MAKEPEACE, ESQ.,

M.A. LOND.

---

DEAR SIR,

Authority in the Church has formed the topic of frequent conversations between us during my sojourn in London.

I beg to dedicate to you this "Essay" on the same subject.

I can hardly better acknowledge your many tokens of friendship than by thus causing you to become better acquainted with my religion,—the source of true happiness and of incomparable blessings.

I remain, DEAR SIR,

Yours affectionately,

CÆS. TONDINI,

Barnabite.

PARIS : 64 RUE DE MONCEAU.

July 16, 1871.

CONTENTS.

---

Letter from Mgr. Mermillod to the Author, p. vii.

Author's Preface to the Second Edition, p. ix.

Dedicatory Letter, p. xv.

INTRODUCTION, pp. 1-9.

Progress of infidelity—Impotency of Protestantism to resist it—The State Churches—Probable disestablishment of that of England—What will follow?—Apprehensions for the religious future of England—Manifestations of sympathy towards the Oriental Orthodox Church—Attempts at union with her—Consequences of this reunion if realized—On the contest about the procession of the Holy Ghost, pp. 1-5, text and note. Reason of this work—The discussion confined to the government of the Oriental Orthodox Church—Division of the work—Why we shall speak more especially of Russia—Statistics of the Oriental Orthodox Church, pp. 5-9, note.

CHAPTER I.

THE ORIENTAL ORTHODOX CHURCH IS ACTUALLY SO GOVERNED AS NOT TO ALLOW OF HER BEING CONSISTENT WITH HER OWN DOCTRINE CONCERNING THE RIGHTS OF BISHOPS IN THE GOVERNMENT OF THE CHURCH, pp. 10-115.

Doctrine of the Oriental Orthodox Church concerning her government—The Church ought to be governed by bishops, pp. 10—13.

(A) ORTHODOX CHURCH OF THE RUSSIAN EMPIRE.

This Church is administered through the Holy Synod of St. Petersburg—The Synod likened by the Russians to a Council, pp. 13, 14 (Statutes of the Synod, or the 'Spiritual Regulation,' p. 15, note). The Synod composed of men taken 'from the different ranks of the ecclesiastical hierarchy'—Reasons which suggested such composition, pp. 15-17. Original minority of bishops—Early remarks against it—The number of the bishops successively increased—How this modification was carried out—The present composition of the Synod—Remarks, pp. 17-20.

Contests as to the Russian Church being really governed by the Tsar, pp. 21, 22.

History of the Establishment of the Synod—The State colleges created by Peter the Great in 1718, p. 22. Peter's fear of conscience—Ukase (in extenso) for the establishment of the Synod, pp. 22-25—The Synod a State College like the others—Why and when its original name of 'Spiritual College' was changed into that of 'Most Holy Synod,' pp. 25-26—The 'Appendix' to the 'Spiritual Regulation'—Synod's jurisdiction fixed by the Tsar—Ukase (in extenso) for the creation of the Chief Procurator of the Synod, pp. 26-28.

Remarks on Peter's proceeding—His mere style an outrage to the Russian bishops—Abdication by them of their personal dignity, pp. 28-30. Document sent to Voltaire concerning the establishment of the Synod—Attempt at opposition to the despotism of Peter—(Voltaire's history of Peter the Great—WRITING FORBIDDEN TO RUSSIAN MONKS). Peter's and Luther's 'So I will,' pp. 30-36, text and notes. Abdication by the Russian bishops of their right of being rulers of the Church—Peter's crafty policy in bringing about the establishment of the Synod—The Orthodox Church, through want of external unity, resembles political society—Application to her, by Peter, of the theory of 'accomplished facts'—Of the recognition, by the Oriental Patriarchs, of Peter's Holy Synod, two years and eight months after its establishment, pp. 36-39. Voltaire's judgment of Peter's design confirmed by that of the Protestant historians of Peter, pp. 39-40 and note.

Oath taken by the members of the Synod (in extenso), pp. 40-41 and note.

The Tsar acknowledged by them upon oath as 'supreme judge of the Synod'—Remarks upon this oath, pp. 42-43 and note.

'Instruction' of the Chief Procurator of the Synod—It is identical with that of the General Procurator of the Senate—Quotations from this single yet two-faced Instruction—Duties of the Chief Procurator of the Synod (the same, respectively, as those of the General Procurator of the Senate)—The Tsar just as much the judge of the Synod as he is the judge of the Senate, pp. 43-46. Other quotations from the same two-faced Instruction—Remarks, pp. 46-48.

The administrative and legislative powers of the Russian Church both in the hands of the Tsar—Synod and Senate both termed 'governing,' and in what sense, p. 48. Synod a mere organ or instrument, through which the Tsar acts—Testimony of the Russian jurists, Mikhailoff and Speranski, pp. 48-50—Testimony of the Russian Code of Laws—Synod and Ministries compared—The administrative power belongs, in its entire extent, to the Tsar, pp. 51-53. Definition of the legislative power by Blackstone and Stephen, pp. 53-54. The Russian Code on the composition, explanation, and completion of the laws, pp. 54-56.

The Tsars and Ecclesiastical Canons—Division of canons into dogmatical and disciplinary—The Kormchaia Kniga—Canons admitted by the Oriental Orthodox Church—How Peter the Great acted with respect to them, pp. 56-62 and notes—(The divorce of the Grand Duke Constantine Paulovich, brother of Alexander I., and the 35th canon of St. Basilus the Great, pp. 61-62, note.)

The Bishops in their relation to the Synod—The 'Spiritual Regulation' on the Russian Bishops' submission to the Synod—Contradiction with the Orthodox doctrine, pp. 62-64 and note. In what sense the Synod is the 'supreme power' for the bishops—Rite for the election and consecration of bishops. Limits to their obedience to the Synod—Quotations from the oath taken by them—The Tsar the source of the Synod's jurisdiction; his will the test of the moral obligation of its prescriptions—The 'Statute of the Ecclesiastical Consistories,' pp. 64-68. Quotations from it, showing prodigious extent of the bishops' submission to the Synod—Comparison with the Catholic bishops' submission to the Pope, pp. 68-73. The Secretary of the Ecclesiastical Consistories—His functions and duties, pp. 73, 74.

The enslavement of the Russian Church by the Tsar, not a mere fact but a kind of dogma for her—Complete distinction between the civil and ecclesiastical powers, each moving in its own sphere, pp. 74-75, and note. Principles laid down in the 'Spiritual Regulation'—Peter the Great's opinion on the matter, pp. 76-77. Catherine II.'s declaration that 'sovereigns are invested with the supreme authority in the Church,' p. 77. The Tsar, in the 'Act of Succession' of Paul I., and the Pope St. Leo, in the Russian liturgy, both called 'Head of the Church'—How this title is explained by each of them, pp. 78-81. Ukases of Paul I.'s successors, p. 81.

The Russian Catechisms—The three principal catechisms, pp. 81-82—Catechism of Peter the Great—Its orthodoxy judged by Protestants, pp. 82-83 and note. Explanation of the fifth commandment in Peter's Catechism—(Of the different division of the Ten Commandments in the Catholic and in the Oriental Orthodox Church) pp. 84-86 and note. Catechism of Platon, metropolitan of Moscow—Bacmeister's judgment of its orthodoxy—Extracts from it, pp. 86-90. Doctrine virtually contained in these two catechisms—Aphorisms concerning the power of the Tsar, pp. 90-92. (Of the note appended to Art. 42 of the Russian Code of Laws concerning the title of 'Head of the Church' applied to the Tsar, p. 91, note). The Church totally deprived of her right of self-government—Catechism of Mgr. Filaret—Striking omissions in it—The episcopal office reduced to the bare administration of sacraments and the teaching of the word of God, pp. 92-94.

Marks of servility exhibited in the liturgical books of the Russian Church—

The imperial family's names in huge capital letters—Formula of approbation of the liturgical books—Remarks, pp. 95-97—Extracts from the 'Rite for the election and consecration of a Bishop'—Of the election of bishops in the Russian Church, pp. 97-101—The office of Orthodoxy—Anathema against those who deny that THE GIFTS OF THE HOLY GHOST ARE POURED OUT UPON ORTHODOX SOVEREIGNS, pp. 101-103—Tacitus' 'Praisers the worst kind of enemies' applied to the praisers of the Russian Church, as regards the consequences of their praises, pp. 101-103.

Prescription of the Criminal Code concerning the REVELATION OF THE SECRET OF CONFESSION—Arguments for quieting the conscience of priests: 'Tell it to the Church,' in Matt. xviii. 15-17, pp. 104-106.

Peter the Great's 'I am your patriarch'—Account of the fact printed at St. Petersburg, pp. 106-107.

Questions to English Protestant divines—Remarks on the behaviour of the rest of the Oriental Orthodox Church with regard to the State Church of Russia, pp. 107-109.

(B) ORTHODOX CHURCH OF THE KINGDOM OF GREECE..

The King proclaimed in the Council of Nauplia (1833) 'Head of the Church' with regard to her administration—Of the royal delegate attached to the Synod of Athens, pp. 109-111.

(C) ORTHODOX CHURCH OF THE TURKISH EMPIRE.

Judgment of Dean Stanley—Right solemnly conferred by this Church on the Sultan of finally settling disputes among Patriarchs—Address of thanksgiving to the Sultan in 1853, pp. 111-115. Conclusion of the First Chapter, p. 115.

CHAPTER II.

THE ORIENTAL ORTHODOX CHURCH IS REALLY DIVIDED INTO SEVERAL SEPARATE AND INDEPENDENT CHURCHES AND EVEN PAPACIES, WHILST CATHOLICS ADMIT ONLY ONE CHURCH AND ONE POPE, pp. 116-144.

Misconceptions of the Catholic doctrine concerning the Pope—Real and imaginary Catholicism—Instance taken from the 'Orthodox Doctrine of the Oriental Church,' by the Archimandrite Makary, pp. 116-117. Of the invisible and visible portions of the Church—The latter needs visible governors—In what different sense the title of 'Head of the Church' is applied to Jesus Christ, and in what to men—How perfectly the 'Orthodox Confession' and the 'Catechism of the Council of Trent' both agree in stating that difference of meaning—The Pope,

- called 'Head of the Church' in the 'Catechism of the Council of Trent,' in the very same sense in which the bishops are called 'Heads of the Church' in the 'Orthodox Confession'—Accordingly, the question is one of the Church's form of government, pp. 117-122.
- Of unity, as a mark of the true Church of Jesus Christ—How far the Oriental Orthodox Church agrees with Protestants in the explanation of the mark of unity—Consequences, pp. 122-124.
- The Oriental Orthodox Church divided into several Papacies—What the Pope is with regard to the government of the Church—Three powers of the Pope of Rome; the doctrinal power, the power of order, and the power of jurisdiction—How distinct and separate these powers are—(That which, with regard to the government of the Church, makes the Pope to be Pope is the last, or the power of jurisdiction, pp. 125-128).
- Jurisdiction of the Tsar compared to that of the Pope—Whether the Tsar is bound by the canons of his Church. 'Faith alone preserves him within the bounds of holy justice'—Extract from Schnitzler, and remarks on his statements—Nicholas Tourgeneff on the Pope—Effects of the episcopal consecration, pp. 128-133.
- What the Tsar is in Russia, the King of Greece is in his kingdom, pp. 133-134. Of the Concordat of the Hellenic Church with the Church of Constantinople in 1852, p. 134, note.
- Of the Œcumenical Councils considered as limiting the jurisdiction of the Tsar and of the King of Greece—Who has power authoritatively to assemble such a Council? question still pending—Instance taken from the recent convocation of an Œcumenical Council by the Patriarch of Constantinople—The number of Œcumenical Councils of the Oriental Orthodox Church apparently fixed for ever—The seven pillars of the House of Wisdom and the Seven Seals—No such Councils can be held without the consent of the Tsar and of the King of Greece—Their behaviour concerning the canons of the seven past Œcumenical Councils admitted by them, a pledge of a similar line of conduct with regard to future canons of any future Œcumenical Council, pp. 135-138.
- Of the four Oriental Patriarchs—They cannot be considered separately as Popes; they constitute together a sort of oligarchy—Development of the Roman papacy compared to that of the patriarchal dignity—Reconsecration of Patriarchs for the SECOND and even the THIRD time—'A double 'grace required to be Patriarch'—(Has not the Oriental Orthodox Church created a NEW DOGMA in 1672 ?)—The oligarchy formed by the Oriental Patriarchs taken as a whole—The Patriarch of Constantinople professing to be entrusted by God 'With the care of all the Churches,' pp. 138-142 and notes.

Conclusion of the Second Chapter—Enslavement, as a first fruit, borne by the denial of the Church's external unity of government, as a mark of the true Church of Jesus Christ, pp. 141-144.

CHAPTER III.

THE ORIENTAL ORTHODOX CHURCH IS LIABLE TO ANY REVOLUTION, JUST AS CIVIL SOCIETIES ARE, pp. 145-160.

What we mean by revolution—Theory of revolutions—By what they are originated—The Oriental Orthodox Church more powerless against them than civil societies ordinarily are—Revolutions from within and from without, pp. 145-147.

Peter the Great's Reformation a revolution from without, viz., from the civil power—Extract from the 'Spiritual Regulation'—The Oriental Orthodox Church unable to oppose any such revolution, pp. 147-150.

The proclamation of the independence of the Hellenic Church in 1833, as an instance of revolution from within—Of the recognition of her independence by the Patriarch of Constantinople, seventeen years after it had been proclaimed—The 'Synodical Volume'—Refutation of it by the Archimandrite Pharmakides—Extracts from this refutation—Principles laid down in it—The seed and the previous apology of all possible revolutions are both to be found in it, pp. 150-154. The lessons of the Archimandrite Pharmakides reduced to practice by Prince Couza in Roumania, and by the Bulgarian Orthodox Church, pp. 154-155.

The chief authorities of the Oriental Orthodox Church of human institution—What men have made men can destroy—Whether it is not a duty for this Church to conform herself to the tendency of the times, and constitute herself a republic—An Orthodox ecclesiastical republic not beyond the limits of possibility, pp. 155-157. What would follow if the cherished dream of Russian patriots should be realized, pp. 157-158. The Oriental Orthodox Church unable finally to settle disputes of jurisdiction—To what her episcopal jurisdiction is reduced—Catholicism or revolution, pp. 158-160.

CHAPTER IV.

THE ROMAN PAPACY, pp. 161-181.

The Church in a perfect sense the Society of God—Her founder is Jesus Christ—He must have told her who ought to be entrusted with the supreme government in the Church, pp. 160-161.

How can we know Jesus Christ's will on that point?—Of the best form of government, pp. 161-163. Patent fact which can lead us to discover Jesus Christ's will: there has ALWAYS been in the Church some authority superior to that of simple bishops—An authority appointed by Jesus Christ must have existed from the time of Jesus Christ.

Application of this principle to the chief authorities of the Oriental Orthodox Church—The patriarchates of Alexandria and of Antioch alone might in this respect advance some claim to a divine origin—Their history is connected with that of St. Peter—Both unfit for a Catholic or 'universal' Church—The Church's conduct towards them to be listened to, pp. 163-166.

The only authority fit for a Catholic (universal) Church, leading us back to Jesus Christ, and spoken of in the Church as coming from Jesus Christ, is the Pope of Rome—Whether this authority is able to preserve the Church from enslavement—May revolutions threaten the Catholic Church?—Is the jurisdiction of the Bishops in this Church effectually supported?—How the episcopal authority is strengthened by that of the Pope—Extract from the dogmatical constitution, 'de Ecclesia,' issued by the Vatican Council (July 18, 1870), pp. 166-170.

Limits to the Pope's authority and power of jurisdiction stated by St. Bernard—Illustration taken from civil Governments, pp. 171-172. Of the Pope's abuses of power—The increased number of rulers too often increases the amount of human passions, preventing the right exercise of the supreme authority—Pope's infallibility and impeccability, their distinctness—Abuses of power in a Pope are possible—Saints have acknowledged, and Popes have confessed them—Extract from St. Leonard da Porto-Maurizio concerning the Popes at the universal judgment, pp. 172-174. (Father Newman on the Pope, p. 175, note). Nobody has more constantly and more effectually protested against the Popes' abuses of power than the Popes themselves—How?—The conduct of the Popes and that of the Reformer of Wittemberg—Jesus Christ mutilated by Luther, pp. 175-176.

What is good for the Church—Fatalism and filial confidence in God—Always some need of reform in the Catholic Church—How this is connected with the return of the Oriental Orthodox Church to Catholic unity, pp. 176-178). (The Barnabite Father Schouvaloff and the Association of Prayers for the return of the Oriental Orthodox Church to Catholic unity, p. 178, note.)

Of the most sure and powerful means to bring about the most perfect reform in the Catholic Church—Reform and schisms—For truth's sake—What is truth?—'They were not of the seed of those men by whom salvation was brought to Israel,' pp. 178-181.

POSTSCRIPT.

Striking analogy between the State Church of England and the State Church of Russia—Whether we have written for the former or the latter, p. 182.

APPENDIX

to the Second Edition.

ADDITIONAL NOTES, p. 185.

SOME DOCUMENTS concerning the 'Association of Prayers in honour of Mary Immaculate for the return of the GREEK-RUSSIAN CHURCH to Catholic unity,' p. 192.

THE POPE OF ROME

AND

THE POPES OF THE ORIENTAL ORTHODOX CHURCH.

INTRODUCTION.

THE events now taking place in Protestant countries, and especially in England, cannot fail to excite the deepest interest in those who have at heart the religious condition of the people.

Not unlike to a political revolution, the authors of which, after having overthrown all constituted authority, vainly endeavour to establish any settled form of government, Protestantism, after having succeeded in partially destroying Catholicism, has proved itself quite unable to take its place. From the time of Luther and the establishment of the State Church of England, many and various have been the attempts to construct some religious edifice which could stand the tests of time and of that cool reflection which time brings with it. The most skilful combinations have been tried, appeals have been made to the genius and talent of men, proposals suggested by human passions have been readily accepted, while whatever could wound our natural instincts has been curtailed or avoided. Trial after trial, attempt after attempt, has been made, but all have proved fruitless and vain, and not one of the numerous religious systems created by Protestantism has a better chance, unless supported from without, of standing the same tests, than any of those which have already failed.

And what has been the necessary consequence of this impotency of Protestantism to create any lasting religious system? That those very dogmas without which Christianity itself cannot exist, deprived as they were of a stable basis in the religious teaching of Protestants, have long since begun to lose their hold on the minds of the people. Even faith in the divinity of Jesus Christ is growing less and less, and one cannot behold without alarm the rapid progress of infidelity. We are threatened, should Protestantism be the only religion of the country, with seeing, at an early date, all faith in God, in a future life, and in everything supernatural, entirely lost.

There is, moreover, a very general desire for a change which, though it might have some good effects, might also, in Protestant countries, hasten the triumph of infidelity over the last remains of Christianity—we mean the separation of Church and State. The most effectual support for Protestant Churches, that of the civil power, is everywhere about to be withdrawn from them.

The support of the State has always proved the best means of maintaining a religious system which has no solid foundation. Leaning upon the State, that special form of Protestantism which the State supports is secured from falling as long as the State lends to it its own framework; and adhering to the State as a parasite adheres to the tree, it is secured from starvation, at least, as long as the State does not cut off those channels through which it receives vital nourishment.

But in these days many people are utterly averse to a State Church, and are ready to do all in their power to bring about a separation. It would almost seem as if, vexed beyond measure at having been so long deceived by the apparent vitality of State Churches, they were desirous of revenging themselves by getting rid of them without further delay or consideration.

This is exactly what is now taking place in England. More than once, on the occasion of the meeting of Parliament, the same authority which three centuries ago pronounced sentence of death against Catholicism, has been called upon to discuss the question whether the same sentence ought not to be passed on the Church which, for three centuries, has occupied the place of Catholicism. Not that the State Church and her adherents have any cause to fear those sanguinary edicts and bloody persecutions which were the lot of their Catholic predecessors—such things are now out of date. The State will merely withdraw its support, leaving the Church to herself, and then it will be seen how long, unsupported by the State, the Anglican Church will linger before dying.

But WHAT WILL FOLLOW? . . . This is the serious question which in our day forcibly engages the attention of every thinking man, whatever be his religious or political creed. What will follow? . . . It was, we believe, the gravity of this question, joined with sad forebodings and apprehensions as to the religious future of England, which, some years ago, caused English divines to make themselves acquainted with the two greatest Christian Churches abroad, the Roman Catholic and the so-called Oriental Orthodox Church, whose principal branches are the Greek and the Russian. The same forebodings and apprehensions have also caused many adherents of the State Church of England to promote any sort of friendly relations with the Oriental Orthodox Church, and to renew the ancient attempts at union with her.<sup>1</sup> Even lately the public papers spoke of the arrival in London of Mgr. Licourgos, the Greek orthodox bishop of Syra, with a view of promoting the work of the union, and hopes are entertained, on both sides, that such attempts will be crowned with success.

<sup>1</sup> See about these attempts: The Orthodox Church of the East in the eighteenth century, being the correspondence between the Eastern patriarchs

Though Catholics, and especially desiring, as the wish nearest our heart, the return of the Oriental Orthodox Church to Catholic unity, we are far from being alarmed or dissatisfied in witnessing such feelings in England towards the Orthodox Church. The Oriental Orthodox Church is far better than Protestantism, and Protestants cannot but find great advantages in becoming orthodox. It is, even for us, a consoling thought that, on the day following the fall of the State Church of England, very many souls, whom ignorance or prejudice keeps from embracing Catholicism, would be preserved from total incredulity by having at hand the Oriental Orthodox Church. Moreover, the union of this Church with the Anglican would not only be for England one step more towards Catholicism, but would very likely remove for ever one of the chief obstacles to the reunion of the Oriental Orthodox Church herself with the Roman Catholic—we mean the contest about the procession of the Holy Ghost. Fully convinced that, with regard to this point, great misunderstanding underlies the alleged opposition between the doctrine of the Oriental Orthodox Church and that of the Roman Catholic,<sup>1</sup> we gladly welcome attempts at union and the non-juring bishops, with an Introduction On various projects of re-union between the Eastern Church and the Anglican Communion, by George Williams, B.D. (London: Rivingtons, 1868).

The London Union Review is, in England, one of the organs of those who pursue the reunion between the Anglican and the Eastern Church. We shall designate the latter by the appellation which she gives to herself of orthodox, this being the title generally used for denoting her, even by those who most vigorously attack her orthodoxy.

<sup>1</sup> See about this important subject, the dissertation of F. V. De Buck, S.J., Essai de conciliation sur le dogme de la procession du Saint-Esprit, printed

which will necessarily lead to a fair and public discussion of the matter. The Anglican Church professes, as to the procession of the Holy Ghost, to hold the same doctrine which Catholics hold; hence it follows that, before the union takes place, this point ought to be discussed, and an agreement arrived at. Whatever the result may be, the discussion itself cannot but be greatly favourable to the Catholic Church.

Nevertheless, as Catholics, we cannot help offering to those who are interested in the religious future of England, some remarks concerning that Oriental Orthodox Church, which, though better than Protestantism, still in vol. ii. of the Études de théologie, de philosophie et d'histoire, par les PP. C. Daniel et J. Gagarin, S.J. (Paris, 1857). After a diligent discussion of the matter, based upon the doctrine contained in the Catechisms of the Oriental Orthodox Church, F. De Buck proposes the acceptance by both sides, of the following canons, in which the Catholic doctrine is so accurately and plainly asserted as to shut out any further misunderstanding.

‘Si quis dixerit Patrem solum non esse unicum fontem Trinitatis, anathema sit.

‘Si quis dixerit Patrem, gignendo Filium, huic non dedisse ut simul secum produceret Spiritum Sanctum, anathema sit.

‘Si quis dixerit Spiritum Sanctum non procedere ex Patre principaliter, seu tamquam ex principio primordiali, et ex Filio non tamquam principio primordiali, sed tamquam habente a Patre ut a se quoque Spiritus Sanctus existentiam, subsistentiam et essentiam acciperet, anathema sit.

‘Si quis dixerit Spiritum Sanctum procedere ex Patre et ex Filio de eo in quo alii sunt ab invicem et non de eo in quo unum sunt, anathema sit.

‘Si quis ergo dixerit duo esse principia, duasve productiones Spiritus Sancti, et non unum principium unamque productionem, aut Patrem et Filium non esse principium Spiritus Sancti per unam utrique communem spirationem, anathema sit.

‘Si demum quis dixerit Spiritum Sanctum ita procedere ex Patre ut simul non sit Spiritus Filii, aut ita esse Spiritum Filii, ut a Filio non simul ac a Patre existentiam, subsistentiam et essentiam accipiat, et secundum hanc notionem ex Filio non procedat, anathema sit.’—p. 346.

See also, Persécutions et souffrances de l'Église catholique en Russie, par un ancien Conseiller d'État de Russie (Paris: Gaume, 1842), pp. 118, 160-2, 280-2.

is not the Church possessing the fulness of religious truth. We shall speak only of her government. This, we are well aware, is the point on which the Anglican Church perfectly agrees with the Oriental Orthodox, and on account of which they both seem more reluctant to enter into any agreement with the Catholic. Yet, this is also the point on account of which, more than on any other, the Oriental Orthodox Church offers some features which are not possibly consistent with a Church professing to hold the constitution given to her by Jesus Christ. Such are the following:—

The Oriental Orthodox Church professes to believe that, according to the doctrine of St. Paul (Acts xx. 28),<sup>1</sup> the divinely-instituted visible heads and rulers of the Church are the BISHOPS. Nevertheless she has not only admitted single priests, and even laymen, to share in ordinary ecclesiastical jurisdiction over bishops, not only solemnly sanctioned and approved forms of administration entirely depriving her of any self-government, not only kept in her communion princes and princesses acting as real and effectual rulers of the Church, not only allowed them to profess to have been invested by God ‘with the supreme authority in the Church,’ but has also tolerated that such doctrine be inserted both in her catechisms for religious instruction of the faithful, and in some of the most solemn acts issued by her, thus causing it to appear stamped with the highest approbation which might be expected from her, unless when assembled in a Council. These are the charges against the Oriental Orthodox Church, which we are going to explain, as a subject of serious consideration to English Protestant divines. How far, after this, the Oriental Orthodox Church can be cleared from the reproach of having acted in open contradiction both to her own doctrine and to the ecclesiastical canons admitted by her, and of having sanctioned a doctrine logically leading to her destruction, if not absolutely approaching to heresy—this we shall abstain from defining, and leave to their judgment.

<sup>1</sup> ‘Take heed to yourselves and to the whole flock, wherein the Holy Ghost hath placed you bishops to rule (ποιμαίνειν, ΠΑΣΤΗ) the Church of God.’—Compare Matt. ii. 6. See further on, chap. i. pp. 10–13, and p. 93, note 1.

But further, a Papacy, viz. an authority superior to that of the simple bishops, controlling them in the discharge of their duties, receiving the appeals of their subjects, and prescribing them laws in which the welfare of many dioceses, or that of the universal Church, is consulted rather than the convenience of a single bishop—a Papacy, we say, is so indispensable to the Church, that the Oriental Orthodox Church, though rejecting as a heresy<sup>1</sup> the doctrine of one single Pope, entrusted by God with the government of the universal Church, in fact does not exist without Popes. We shall show that the chief divisions of the Oriental Orthodox Church are so constituted as to present the whole Oriental Orthodox Church divided into several separate and independent Papacies. Hence it is that, whatever is objected against the Catholic doctrine of a visible head of the Church, as destroying her unity by making her a double-headed one, ought, with far more reason, to be alleged against the Oriental Orthodox Church, as many Popes destroy the unity of the Church more than one single Pope does. Hence again it is that the Oriental Orthodox Church, in order to be consistent with herself, must either abolish every ecclesiastical dignity interfering with the divinely-instituted authority of the bishops, and exercising jurisdiction over them, or at least abstain from representing and condemning the Catholic doctrine of a visible head of the Church as contrary to Scripture, and altering the constitution given to the Church by her founder Jesus Christ.

<sup>1</sup> 'Parmi les hérésies qui, par des décrets que Dieu seul connaît, s'étaient étendues sur une grande partie de l'univers, dominait jadis l'Arianisme, et aujourd'hui le Papisme; mais ce dernier, comme l'autre qui a déjà disparu entièrement, ne tiendra pas non plus, malgré sa vigueur apparente; il passera et s'abîmera, et l'on entendra retentir la grande voix céleste: "Il s'est abîmé!"'—Apoc. 12, 10.

Encyclique de S. S. le Pape Pie IX aux Chrétiens d'Orient (6 janv. 1848), et Encyclique responsive des Patriarches et des Synodes de l'Eglise d'Orient, trad. du grec par le Dr. Démétrius Dallas (Paris, Klincksieck, 1850). 8vo. Encycl. respons. § iv. pp. 31, 32.

But, above all, there is a practical consequence resulting from the doctrine of the Oriental Orthodox Church concerning her own government, to which we intend to call the reader's closest attention. That doctrine, we do not hesitate to affirm, contains in itself the seeds of all revolutions, logically leads to them, and does not, to say the least, insure to the government of the Church any greater stability than that which civil Governments enjoy. The proofs in support of this assertion will form the subject of an especial chapter.

After this we shall examine how it is that the same danger is not to be feared for the Catholic Church. Finally, we shall dwell on three points of the highest interest, as those to which may be reduced all objections which, from a practical point of view, can be alleged against the supremacy of the Pope; we mean, the limits of his authority, the abuse of it, and, lastly, the reason which justifies Catholics in their filial devotion and extensive obedience to the Pope.

We need hardly remind our readers that, in the whole discussion, we have exclusively in view the mere external government or administration of the Church. Our discussion is confined to that which, up to the present time, has been the chief obstacle preventing the return of the Oriental Orthodox Church to Catholic unity, that is, the Pope's power of jurisdiction over the universal Church.

We further call the attention of our readers to another

Throughout the whole work we have not trusted to second-hand authorities, but have deemed it our duty to consult all the documents we quote in their original languages.

In Russia	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	56,000,000
In the Turkish Empire	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	12,400,000
In Greece	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	1,308,508
In Roumania	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	3,860,000
In Austria	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	3,166,000
In Servia	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	1,074,000

Total . . 77,808,508

CHAPTER I.

THE ORIENTAL ORTHODOX CHURCH IS ACTUALLY SO GOVERNED AS NOT TO ALLOW OF HER BEING CONSISTENT WITH HER OWN DOCTRINE CONCERNING THE RIGHTS OF BISHOPS IN THE GOVERNMENT OF THE CHURCH.

THE chief point of difference between the Catholic and the Oriental Orthodox Church is to be found, as already said, in the doctrine concerning the government of the Church. The Oriental Orthodox Church denies that Jesus Christ has appointed any visible head to the whole Church, whereas she professes to believe that every bishop is the real chief and head of his particular eparchie or diocese.

If we are allowed to use, for clearness' sake, a comparison taken from what we witness in civil society, the Oriental Orthodox Church may be likened to a confederation of small States, each of them independent of the rest, and which do not recognise any authority invested with the right of enacting laws to bind them all, except a congress or council, composed of the chiefs of the different States. Let us listen to the 'Exposition of the Orthodox Faith of the Eastern Church,'<sup>1</sup> commonly known under the title of 'Letter of the Patriarchs of the East on the Orthodox Faith' (1672), and which, together with the 'Orthodox Confession' of Peter Moghila, is endorsed by the whole Orthodox Church as a touchstone of her faith: ' . . . The head of this Catholic (universal) Church is <sup>1</sup> See, for the 'Expositions of the Orthodox faith,' the account given of them in the Introduction to the Orthodox Theology (Введение въ православное Божество) by Mgr. Makary, Bishop of Vinnitza. This account was translated by J. M. Neale, and inserted in his Voices from the East (London, 1859), docum. viii. p. 209.

Jesus Christ. . . . Besides, the Holy Ghost has appointed to the particular Churches, which truly are Churches and members of the universal one, the bishops as GOVERNORS and PASTORS, and not abusively, but in all points and properly CHIEFS and HEADS.<sup>1</sup>

The best commentary on that passage is the following, which we take from the 'Dogmatical Orthodox Theology' of Mgr. Makary, Bishop of Vinnitza, and Rector to the Ecclesiastical Academy of St. Petersburg. This important work, which is highly considered by the whole Orthodox Church, was translated into French by a Russian. As we have not at hand the Russian original, we shall quote the French translation:—

'L'évêque,' it is there said, 'est enfin LE PRINCIPAL ADMINISTRATEUR DE SON ÉGLISE (Act. xx. 28, comp. Lettre des Patr., etc., art. 10). Avant tout il a autorité sur la hiérarchie, qui lui est subordonnée, et sur le clergé. Tous les prêtres, tous les diacres et serviteurs de l'Église, doivent suivre ses dispositions et ne rien faire dans l'Église sans sa décision (Reg. apost. 39; Conc. Laod. 57; Conc. Carth. 6, 42, 52; d'Antioche, 8, 25; de Chalcéd. 8; de Sardique, 14); ils sont soumis à sa juridiction (1 Tim. v. 19), en vertu de laquelle il peut leur infliger différentes punitions (Reg. apost. 15, 32, 55; Conc. Chalcéd. 18; in Trullo, 34). Outre le clergé, tout le troupeau est sous l'autorité spirituelle de l'évêque. Il doit surveiller dans son diocèse l'exécution des lois divines

<sup>1</sup> Kimmel, Libri symbolici Ecclesiæ Orientalis (Jenæ, 1843). Dosithei Confessio, cap. x. ἡγουμένους καὶ ποιμένας καὶ ὅλος οὐκ ἐν καταχρῆσει ἀλλὰ κυρίως ἀρχὰς καὶ κεφαλὰς τοὺς ἐπισκόπους ἔθηκε τὸ Πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον—p. 436 (2nd edit., Jenæ, 1850, p. ib.). In the Russian translation of this 'Exposition of Faith,' the bishops are termed Правители, Пастыри, Начальники, Главн.

The second edition of Kimmel's work bears the title of Monumenta fidei Ecclesiæ Orientalis. Important corrections and additions were made to the first edition, by Herm. Weissenborn. See also, in the same work, Confessio Orthodoxa, quæst. 85, p. 158.

et des commandements de l'Église (Clem. Rom. Ep. 1. aux Corinth. 51, 56; Cyprian. Epist. 69). C'est lui qui, particulièrement et surtout, a le droit de lier et de délier (Lettre des Patr. art. 10), suivant les règles des Apôtres, les décrets des Conciles (Reg. Apost. 31; Conc. de Carth. 6), et le témoignage unanime des anciens docteurs de l'Église (Cyprian. Epist. 75; Tertull. de Pœnit. cap. 4, 7; Greg. M. in Evang. lib. ii.; Hom. 26, n. 5, et suivants). C'est pourquoi les hommes apostoliques pressèrent avec tant de force les fidèles d'obéir à l'évêque.<sup>1</sup> And further on:—'Cependant après avoir commis L'ADMINISTRATION VISIBLE de son Église aux Évêques, qui, par le pouvoir dont ils sont revêtus, réunissent tous les croyants en une seule société extérieure, le Seigneur Jésus la gouverne Lui-même invisiblement, comme son véritable Chef; et en la vivifiant par la seule et même grâce du Saint-Esprit, il réunit tous ses membres par un lien intérieur. (Conf. Orth. p. 1, quæst. 85; Lettre des Patr., etc., art. 10).'<sup>2</sup>

In the profession of faith, pronounced by the members of other Christian confessions, when being admitted into the Russian Orthodox Church, and in which are pointed out the features distinguishing the belief of the so-called orthodoxy from that of heretics, there is an article running as follows:—'I believe and confess that the foundation head and most supreme Pontiff and Archipastor of the holy Orthodox Catholic Church<sup>3</sup> is our Lord Jesus Christ, and by Him the bishops have been appointed as pastors and teachers FOR THE GOVERNMENT OF THE CHURCH (k'pravlenii tserkvi), and that the governor (pravitel) and pilot of that Church is the Holy Ghost.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Théologie dogmatique orthodoxe, par Macaire, etc. (Paris: Cherbuliez, 1859-60). Tom. ii. § 174, pp. 266, 267.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid. § 176, p. 271.

<sup>3</sup> The Oriental Church calls herself, besides Orthodox and Apostolic, also Catholic.

Much might be said about the doctrine expressed in the preceding quotations, but we shall closely examine it in the following chapters. For the present we confine ourselves to stating that, according to the doctrine of the Oriental Orthodox Church, the government of the Church was entrusted by Jesus Christ to the BISHOPS, who are therefore proclaimed governors (ἡγουμένοι), pastors (ποιμένες), chiefs (ἄρχαι), heads (κεφαλαὶ), of the Church—all titles which necessarily imply the bishops being the highest authority in the Church, and positively exclude the mere supposition of any secular authority entitled to command in ecclesiastical matters over them.

We are now going to examine how far the Oriental Orthodox Church, and especially her chief branch the Russian Orthodox Church, is governed according to the doctrine laid down in her official Expositions of Faith, and to what extent her bishops may be considered, if not the highest, at least a real authority in the Church. Let us begin with the Church of the Russian Empire.

IF WE LISTEN to the Russian Orthodox divines, as well as to the official documents of the State Church of Russia, the Holy Synod of St. Petersburg is to be considered as a permanent Council ruling over her. 'The most holy Synod,' says Mgr. Philaret, Archbishop of Tchernigoff, 'is, as regards its composition, what a legitimate ecclesiastical Council is.'<sup>1</sup> In fact, the Russian word sobor, denoting generally 'Council,' and as such applied to the œcumenical and provincial Councils of the Oriental Orthodox Church, is equally applied to the Most Holy Synod of St. Petersburg; and, thanks to that homonymy, the last is commonly believed and spoken of as a Council.<sup>2</sup> There exists, moreover, a document in which the newly established Synod asked from Peter the Great a resolution as to the way in which it ought to communicate with the Senate, submitting to His Majesty's consideration the suggestion that the Synod possessed 'the honour, the power, and the authority of the former Patriarch of Moscow, or even a greater, because of its being a Council.'<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Вѣрую и исповѣдую яко церкви святой православно-каѳолической основаніе, глава и наивышшій Архіерей и Архіпастырь есть Господь нашъ Иисусъ Христосъ, отъ негоже Архіерее, пастыріе и учителіе къ правленію церкви уставленнъ суть: и яко сея церкви правитель и кормчій есть Духъ святой. (Чинопослѣдованіе соединяемымъ изъ иновѣрныхъ къ православно-каѳолической восточной церкви.—Москв. 1849., 4то. р. 48. (Требникъ.—Москв. 1836, р. 257.

Of the many remarks which are suggested by such likening of the Synod to a Council,<sup>4</sup> we shall only dwell

<sup>1</sup> Святѣйшій Синодъ, по составу своему то же что законный церковный соборъ. (Исторія русской Церкви (Черниговъ 1862. Періодъ пятый, § 2, p. 3.

<sup>2</sup> In the Statute of the Ecclesiastical Consistories of which we shall speak further on (p. 67 et seq.) the bishops and their tribunals (Consistoria) are said to be under the jurisdiction of the Holy Synod, as the governing Council of the Russian Church: яко правительствующаго Россійскою Церкви Собора, art. 2.

<sup>3</sup> Духовная же Коллегія (Синодъ) имѣть честь, силу и власть Патріаршескую, или едва и не большую понеже соборъ. See Полное Собрание Законовъ Россійской Имперіи, 1st series, tom. vi. (3734) 14th of February, 1721. No. 2. p. 356. See also the Пункты, at the end of the Духовный Регламентъ, before the Прибавленіе, in any edition whatever of it.

<sup>4</sup> 'Cette affirmation ne supporte pas l'examen; nous nous bornerons à y opposer les paroles de M. Katkoff dans la Gazette de Moscou, 1866. No. 216.' 'Le Saint Synode ne peut pas tenir la place des conciles, parce que tous les évêques ne prennent pas part à ses délibérations, tandis que tous les évêques doivent absolument siéger dans les conciles provinciaux tels qu'ils

on the one concerning its composition. According to the statutes of the Holy Synod, commonly known under the title of 'Spiritual Regulation,' the Holy Synod is to be composed of men taken from the different ranks of the ecclesiastical hierarchy. The creator of the Synod, and real author of its 'Spiritual Regulation,' Peter the Great, who never showed any great reliance on human virtue,<sup>1</sup>

ont été institués par les Apôtres et par les conciles œcuméniques. 'Entre le concile de l'Église russe et le synode il y a la même différence qu'entre la chambre des pairs d'Angleterre et une commission composée d'une demi-douzaine de lords, choisis par la reine. Le ministre qui s'aviserait de soutenir qu'il est indifférent de soumettre une loi à la chambre des lords ou à une telle commission, commettrait une énorme hérésie constitutionnelle.'—Le Clergé russe, par le Père J. Gagarin, S.J. (nouvelle édit. Paris: Albanel, 1871), p. 239.

<sup>1</sup> The Spiritual Regulation is drawn up in such a style as fully to justify its having been called Un règlement de caserne. Theophane Prokopovich, archbishop of Pleskoff, the alter ego of Peter in ecclesiastical matters, wrote it down by order of the Tzar; Peter corrected it; then it was recited and corrected in a full assembly of bishops, archimandrites, and senators. After that, Peter deigned to subscribe it with his own hand. The Appendix (прибавление) to it he deigned likewise to correct with his own hand, and afterwards the members of the already created Synod were summoned, by an especial ukase, to subscribe to it. In quoting also the Spiritual Regulation, we quote, if not Peter's own words, at least Peter's own maxims, ideas, and feelings. His are, for instance, the following views about the virtue of his monks.

Monks, their manner of living.

23. The Principal and his brethren are not, after dinner, to carry any remains of victuals from the table into their cells, save only 'kwass.' If this order was not given, everything would be wasted profusely, and carried out of the monastery.

26. None but the Principal has power to give away anything out of the monastery; not even he without the concurrence of the elders of the fraternity, attesting expressly, in writing, to whom, and for what use, anything is given. Were not this restraint to be upon all, every one would lavishly and impudently squander what belongs to the monastery amongst his relations and friends.

27. All the revenues arising from villages belonging to the monastery, and the donations of religious persons, and ecclesiastical profits, are to be repositied in one certain place, and taken thence, to supply all the occasions of the church and monastery, and of the fraternity; without this care there would be no end of pillaging, &c.—Spir. Regul. part iii. translated into fairly declares that, by so ordaining, he had in view to increase the obstacles to a common agreement of the members of the Synod in any iniquity whatever. The College (Synod), he says, 'consists of such members as cannot possibly all of them enter into a secret combination, that is, the persons are of a different order and vocation—bishops, archimandrites, hegoumens, protopopes. In truth, it is inconceivable how such a body should together dare to conceal a fraudulent design, much less conspire in carrying on an act of injustice.'<sup>1</sup>

Further on Peter the Great draws the attention of his people to another advantage resulting from such a combination of persons belonging to different degrees of the ecclesiastical hierarchy. 'Such a conciliary (sobornoe) government,' so he says, 'will be as a school of spiritual improvement; for each assessor, by the communication of many and different decisions, counsels, and regular reasonings (such as various cases require), will readily be instructed in spiritual policy, and, by daily exercise, be so well practised in it as to be perfectly qualified to minister in the house of God, and afterwards, by an easy step, from being of the number of the colleagues or assessors, be deservedly advanced to the episcopal dignity (na stepen archiereistva); and thus, by God's assistance, barbarism will speedily be banished from the spiritual order in English in Consett's The present State and Regulations of the Church of Russia, (London, 1729), pp. 169, 170. ПОЛН. СОБР. tom. vi. (4022) p. 711.

Some time after, Peter the Great himself addressed an 'Instruction' to the Synod, On monastic vocation (О званіи монашескомъ) which Voltaire, that competent judge in matters of Christian perfection (!), qualifies as written both 'par un ministre d'État et par un Père de l'Église' (Histoire de Pierre le Grand et de la Russie, chap. xiv.) See ПОЛНОЕ СОБРАНІЕ ЗАКОН. Росс. Имперіи, 1st. ser. tom. vii. (4450), January 31, 1724, p. 227.

<sup>1</sup> Spir. Reg. part i. No. 5; Cons. p. 18. ПОЛН. СОБР. tom. vi. (3718) p. 317.

Russia, and we have good reason to hope for a thorough reformation.’<sup>1</sup>

We hardly need point out the inconsistency of such considerations. The latter especially, far from conveying any evidence in support of the preference to be given to the conciliary form of government found out for his Church by Peter, brings forward one of the chief motives which ought to lead every Russian to condemn it. In fact, that Synod which is supposed to govern the whole Orthodox Church of Russia is there represented as a SCHOLARSHIP, a NOVITIATE, a kind of APPRENTICESHIP for future rulers of a single diocese, the whole Russian Church being thus compelled to bear the consequences of her future bishops’ mistakes, and to obtain, at her own expense, the benefit derived from their daily increasing experience.

But let us return to the subject. The Holy Synod of Russia having consequently to be composed of men taken from the different ranks of the ecclesiastical hierarchy, in what proportion must the bishops be represented in it? ‘The number of the rulers’ (viz. the members of the Synod), says the ‘Spiritual Regulation,’ ‘is twelve in all, and is made up of persons of different ranks, as bishops, archimandrites, hegoumens, protopopes; of which number are three bishops, and of the rest as many of each order as are thought requisite.’<sup>2</sup> Also, according to the ‘Spiritual Regulation,’ the care of governing the whole Orthodox Church of Russia, of overseeing the bishops, of receiving the appeals of their subjects, and of making known<sup>1</sup> laws binding every one of them, restraining, modifying, or annulling their jurisdiction, should devolve in Russia on a body composed of THREE bishops and NINE simple priests. What a singular Council, and what contempt for the divine rights of bishops!

<sup>1</sup> Spir. Reg. ibid. No. 9, Consett, p. 22. ПОЛН. СОБР. tom. vi. (3718), pp. 318, 319.

We quote literally Consett’s translation, and whenever we change a word, we put the corresponding Russian into a parenthesis.

<sup>2</sup> Spir. Reg., part iii. No. 1. Consett, p. 104. ПОЛН. СОБР. ibid. pp. 343, 344.

We hasten, however, to acknowledge that Peter the Great's successors did not lay much weight on the considerations alleged by him in favour of a Synod composed of men belonging to the different ranks of the ecclesiastical hierarchy, and, braving even the danger of plots and conspiracies alluded to by Peter, they successively increased the numerical proportion of the bishops. Already, in the year 1730, Theophane Prokopovich, the very writer of the 'Spiritual Regulation,' had presented to the Synod a special memorial, in which he pointed out the necessity, according to the ancient canons, of the number of the bishops sitting in the Synod being greater than that of the archimandrites, 'and this was accepted as a rule.'<sup>2</sup> The application, however, of that rule depending in practice on the Tsars, the number of the bishops sitting in the Synod equally depended on their will, so that the first official modification of the prescription laid down in the 'Spiritual Regulation' bears the date of 1763, when the Tsarina Catherine II., at the suggestion of the 'Commission on Ecclesiastical Property,' consented that the

<sup>1</sup> We shall speak in detail of the legislative power in the Russian Orthodox Church, and examine where it is to be found. See p. 53 et seq.

<sup>2</sup> Mgr. Filaret, Archbish. of Kharkoff and then of Tchernigoff. Ист. русск. церкви. Черниговъ, 1862, Пер. V. § 2. p. 3. Prokopovich's memorial is unfortunately still kept in manuscript. Its existence is mentioned by Eugeny, Metrop. of Kieff, in his Словарь историческій писателей духовнаго чина: St. Petersburg, 1827, vol. ii. p. 319. It bears the title of Разсужденіе о присутствованіи въ Синодѣ болшему числу изъ Архіереевъ.

Synod should be composed of three bishops, two archimandrites, and one protopope.<sup>1</sup> Since that time the composition of the Synod has undergone other modifications, and we are glad to state that it is now almost exclusively composed of bishops. Moreover, the Holy Synod can no longer be considered as an apprenticeship or practical school of religious policy for future bishops, as Peter had proposed to himself to make it. The only dignitaries of the Russian Church who are now allowed to sit in the Synod, without being bishops, are His Majesty's confessor, and the chief chaplain to the army and fleet. They both belong to the white or secular clergy, and, being married, cannot consequently be promoted to the episcopal dignity.<sup>2</sup>

We heartily congratulate the Orthodox Church of Russia on such progress towards reinstating herself in the right of being governed only by bishops; at the same time, however, we cannot help remarking that this very progress was accomplished in such a way as to bear undeniable evidence to her being a slave of the Tsars. Peter the Great had taken care that at least some appearance of legality should not be entirely wanting in the establishment of the Synod, for in the full assembly of bishops, archimandrites, and senators which we have already mentioned, he procured the signatures of his bishops to be attached to the 'Spiritual Regulation.' Now, as any change in the composition of the governing Synod ought to be considered as a most important modification of Peter's reformation, one might expect that the consent of the bishops would have been required beforehand. Far from this, the Russian Tsars and Tsarinas still altered,

<sup>1</sup> See Полное Собрание Законовъ, 1 ser. Том. xliv. Книга Штатовъ Отдѣл. iii. No. 11,942. Oct. 1, 1763, pp. 21, 22.

<sup>2</sup> The monks are commonly called in Russia the black clergy, because of their being dressed in black. The bishops are always taken from the changed, suppressed, or modified the prescriptions laid down in the 'Spiritual Regulation' without the slightest regard to the rights of their bishops. Moreover, if the fact proves a tendency towards having the Synod exclusively composed of bishops, still the nomination, as well as the dismissal, of its members in practice entirely depends on the will of the Tsar. Hence it is that the Russian Orthodox Church is continually exposed to the danger of seeing herself governed by an assembly the majority of which would be simple priests (if not deacons), an assembly, besides, in which, according to Peter's decree, still in full force, all the members of the Synod must BE ON A LEVEL, and consequently the bishops on a level with the simple priests. Peter ordered that the president himself must be a mere primus inter pares, just like the president of modern Parliaments. 'The appellation itself of President,' says Peter, 'is not an arrogant one, for it denotes nothing more than one that sits before others (predsedatel), for which reason he cannot think highly of himself, nor can others think so of him. . . .'<sup>1</sup> So anxious was Peter for humility, equality, and fraternity among the members of the Synod!

Let us, however, suppose that the two secular priests, who, by virtue of a customary right, are still members of the Synod, be by a special decree excluded from it, let us even imagine the Tsar ordering that henceforth bishops only should be called to form the Synod, still there remain very many other laws to be abolished, in order that it may be credible that the Russian bishops are chiefs and heads in their Church.

'In the administration of the Church,' so says the Russian Code of Laws, 'the autocratical authority (the monks. A secular priest cannot be bishop unless, after the death of his wife, he had embraced the religious life.

<sup>1</sup> Spir. Reg. part i. No. 7; Consett, p. 21. ПОЛН. СОБР. том vi. p. 318.

‘Tsar’) ACTS by means of the Most Holy Governing Synod ‘appointed by it.’<sup>1</sup> (Fund. Law, art. 43.)

Alas! this article alone evinces, more than any number of arguments, that the Russian Church is inconsistent with the doctrine laid down in her ‘Expositions of Faith’ concerning the government of the Church. One could hardly succeed in expressing more plainly and more distinctly the principle that the real and effectual ruler of the Russian Church is the Tsar! HE it is who governs; the Synod is but an organ, an instrument by means of which HE governs; finally, the instrument itself is chosen and appointed by the Tsar! We shall return further on to this article, and examine how it is commented on and explained by the ‘Code of Laws’ itself, and the Russian jurists (see p. 48 et seq.; p. 91, note). We quote it here as a fit introduction to what we are going to say on the Tsar.

The fact that the Russian Orthodox Church is really governed by the Tsar, is still advanced, and no less still contested, according to the different points of view of those who take an interest in the question. So much has been and is said every day on that subject, that it would appear impossible to do otherwise than repeat what has been already said.<sup>2</sup> We deemed it advisable, however, not to

<sup>1</sup> Въ управленіи церковномъ Самодержавная Власть дѣйствуетъ посредствомъ Святѣйшаго Правительствующаго Синода, Ею учрежденнаго (Сводъ Законовъ россійской Имперіи, ed. 1857, tom. i. Основ. госуд. зак. ст. 43, p. 10.

<sup>2</sup> A most interesting account of the Holy Synod, and the whole mechanism of the ecclesiastical administration in Russia, will be found in F. Gagarin’s quoted work Le clergé russe (Paris, 1871). Besides, this book contains such an amount of information concerning the Russian Orthodox Church as to make the reader considerably acquainted with her. An English translation of this interesting work is announced as shortly to be published by Messrs. Burns, Oates, & Co.

See also Persecutions et souffrances de l’Église catholique en Russie (Paris, 1844). Theiner, Die Staatskirche Russlands (Schaffhausen, 1853). Schnitzler, L’Empire des Tsars (Paris, 1856). Silbernagl, Verfassung overlook this point, as we hope that the reader will be sufficiently repaid for his perusal of our work by becoming better acquainted than is commonly the case with the official documents of the State Church of Russia.

In order to appreciate to their full extent the encroachments of the Tzars on the divine rights of the bishops, we must consider the establishment of the Synod in relation to the analogous reforms accomplished by Peter the Great in every department of the State administration of Russia. Since the year 1718 Peter the Great had abolished the ancient State-Chanceries (prikazy), and appointed for the various branches of the administration of the Russian Empire different Colleges, viz: 1. That of Foreign Affairs (tchujestrannykh djel); 2. Of Revenue (kamor); 3. Of Justice (yustitsia); 4. Of Revision (revizion); 5. Of Army (voinskoi); 6. Of Admiralty (admiralteiskoi); 7. Of Commerce (kommerts); 8. Of State Counting-office (Shtats-Kontor); 9. Of Mines and Manufactures (berg i manufactur). The functions of each College were fixed by an Ukase of the 12th of Dec. 1718.<sup>1</sup> In the year 1720 Peter completed his work by issuing a 'Generalnyi Reglament,' which fixed the 'mode of action,' that is the uniform method to which all the Colleges must equally conform in carrying on their affairs.<sup>2</sup>

In witnessing the happy success with which his efforts were crowned, Peter the Great could not help feeling that God also required from him the reformation of the Russian Church. This he himself has announced to the world. Let us hear what he says:—

'AMONGST the many cares which the empire com-

und gegenwärtiger Bestand sämtlicher Kirchen des Orients, &c. (Landshut, 1865), etc.

<sup>1</sup> ПОЛН. СОБР. 1st series, tom. v. (3255) p. 601.

<sup>2</sup> ПОЛН. СОБР. 1st series, tom. vi. (3534) Feb. 28, 1720, p. 141.

mitted to Us by God requires for the good government of Our hereditary kingdoms and conquests, casting Our eye on the Spiritual Order, and observing in them great irregularity and a great defect in their proceedings, We should indeed be afflicted in Our conscience, and have too just cause to fear lest We appear to be guilty of ingratitude to the Most High, if after, by His gracious assistance, We have happily succeeded in a regulation, both military and civil, We should neglect the regulation of the Spiritual Order; and lest, when the impartial Judge shall require of Us an account for the vast trust He has reposed in Us, We should not be able to give an answer.’<sup>1</sup>

One immediately conceives that a man afflicted by such pangs of conscience could not long endure a similar torture, and would have soon yielded. Besides, as half-measures and compromises can never calm the conscience of strong-minded men, it must necessarily be expected that Peter the Great would have felt compelled to do for the Church whatever he, in his conscience, would have deemed the best, however radical the measures which might have been required. Let us again listen to him:—

‘WE THEREFORE (because of the before-mentioned fear of conscience), after the example of former religious kings, recited in the Old and New Testaments, having taken upon Us the care of the regulation of the clergy and Spiritual Order, and not seeing any better way for it than a conciliary government (sobornoe pravitelstvo); yet, because this is too weighty a charge for any single person to whom the supreme power is not hereditary, We appoint

<sup>1</sup> Ukase for the establishment of the Holy Synod. Consett, p. 3. (Полн. Собр. tom. vi. (3718) p. 314.) In the same identical terms, Peter expresses himself in his letter to the Patriarch of Constantinople, informing him of the already accomplished establishment of the Synod. See. p. 36 et seq.

a Spiritual College, i.e. a spiritual conciliary government, which is authorized to rectify, according to the "Regulation" here following,<sup>1</sup> ALL spiritual affairs throughout the Russian Church. And We require all our faithful subjects of every rank and condition, spiritual and temporal, to account this administration powerful and authoritative, and to have recourse to it for the direction, resolution, and determination of their most private spiritual affairs, and to acquiesce in its definitive sentence; to obey its decrees and orders in everything, under the pain of a severe punishment for disobedience and contumacy, as in the other Colleges. This College must also perfect hereafter their "Regulation" with more rules, such as the different occasions of various affairs shall require; but the Spiritual College must not do this without Our consent. We constitute members of this Spiritual College, as is here specified, one president, two vice-presidents, four counsellors, four assessors. And because it is mentioned in the first part of this "Regulation," in the 7th and <sup>1</sup> The Spiritual Regulation, of which we have already spoken (see p. 15, note). It bears in Russian the title of Духовный Регламентъ, and is inserted in vol. vi. of the Полное Собрание Законовъ (Complete Collection of Laws) No. 3718, Jan. 25, 1721, p. 314 et seq. A German translation of it appeared in the year 1724, in Dantzic, under the title of Geistliches Reglement, auf hohen Befehl, etc. 8vo. A French translation, but so inaccurate as not to allow the reader to rely on it, was published in the Anecdotes du règne de Pierre le Grand, 1745, 16mo. Another German translation (without the 'Appendix' priboavlenie) was inserted by Haigold (pseud. of Aug. Ludw. Schlözer) in his Beilagen zum neueränderten Russland (Riga und Mittau, 1769), vol. i. Finally, a Latin and complete translation appeared in 1785, at St. Petersburg, at the expense of Prince Potemkin.

This last translation, which, on some accounts, may be considered as official, is extremely rare, as, according to Phil. Strahl (Gelehrte Russland, Leipz. 1828, p. 423), Prince Potemkin himself caused the greatest part of the copies to be destroyed. The Paris Société bibliographique has undertaken to reprint it, together with a French translation made from the Russian, and appropriate notes.

8th sections, that the president is liable to be tried by his brethren—to wit, in the same College—in case he does anything amiss; We therefore allow him one vote, as the rest have. All the members of this College, at their entering on their office, must take oath, and promise on the Holy Gospel, in the form of oath hereto annexed.<sup>1</sup>—

‘Signed and subscribed with His Imperial Majesty’s own hand,

PETER.

‘Petersburg, the 25th day of January,
‘in the year of our Lord 1721.’<sup>2</sup>

Also, in force of this imperial brief, Russia must add, on the 25th of January, 1721,<sup>3</sup> to the College of Mines and Manufactures, a tenth College, called Spiritual, and intrusted with the government of all her spiritual affairs. And in order that no one might be mistaken as to the Synod being a State College like the others, Peter the Great ordered that, in the conduct of its affairs, the Spiritual College should entirely conform itself to the prescriptions contained in the above-mentioned ‘Generalnyi Reglamente’ of the 28th of February, 1720, enacted for the other Colleges.<sup>4</sup>

Shortly after, however, a question of some importance

<sup>1</sup> We shall presently speak of that oath (see p. 40).

<sup>2</sup> ПОЛН. СОБР. tom. vi. p. 314. Consett, p. 3.

<sup>3</sup> We remark here, once for all, that in quoting the official documents of the Russian Orthodox Church, we keep the date of the Russian Calendar, which is 12 days behind ours.

<sup>4</sup> ‘Here is nothing particularly delivered of the employ or conduct of the affairs (О ДѢЙСТВАХЪ) of the Spiritual College, because His Imperial Majesty required them to act by the rules of the Generalnyi Reglamente (по Генеральному Регламенту).’—Spir. Reg. part iii. II. Consett, p. 124. See, for the Russian, any separate edition of the ДУХОВН. РЕГЛ. See also Spir. Reg. at the beginning of part i.

caused the Spiritual College to be called Most Holy Synod. During divine service people were accustomed to hear mentioned in the Ektenias, the name of the former chief authority of the Russian Church, the patriarch of Moscow. Now that the Patriarchate no longer existed, having been abolished by Peter, and the Spiritual College had entered on his functions, this had evidently the right of being named in the Ektenias, instead of the Patriarch. It seems, however, that they found the name of College, connected as it was with mines and manufactures, to be too profane for the purpose, as in a petition to the Tsar, the Spiritual College proposed to His Majesty the adoption of the denomination of 'Most Holy Governing Assembly' (sobranie). Peter the Great wrote with his own hand on the petition, 'Most Holy Synod, or Most Holy Governing Synod,' and since that time, that is since the 14th of February, 1721, the Spiritual College has been called MOST HOLY SYNOD or MOST HOLY GOVERNING SYNOD.<sup>1</sup>

In the following year appeared the 'Appendix' (privavlenie) to the 'Spiritual Regulation,' drawn up also by Theophane Prokopovich. 'This Appendix to the "Spiritual Regulation"' (so it runs near the end) His Imperial Majesty has himself been pleased to suffer to be read in His own august presence, and to give amendments to it with His own hand; and, after His approbation of it, to order it to be printed and published, in the end of April and in the beginning of May, this year 1722. And by consent of His Imperial Majesty, the underwritten members of the Most Holy Governing (pravitelstvuiustchi) Synod have also subscribed to this Appendix.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Spir. Reg. 'Points wherein His Most Serene Imperial Majesty, with his own august hand, hath vouchsafed a resolution.'—Consett. p. 125. Полн. Собр. tom. vi. (3734), February 14, 1721, pp. 355–356.

<sup>2</sup> Spir. Reg. Consett. p. 184. In the Полное Собрание, the Прибавление къ Духовному Регламенту is printed at the end of the laws issued in the month of May 1722. Tom. vi. (4022), p. 699.

After this, Peter, by different decisions given to several propositions (dokladnyi punkty) of the Holy Synod, and especially by those of the 12th of April, 1722,<sup>1</sup> fixed the exact limits of its jurisdiction. ‘Some matters’ (so says Mgr. Filaret, Archbishop of Tchernigoff) ‘which had hitherto been judged by the ecclesiastical authority, were excluded BY THE WILL OF THE TSAR (volieio Gosudaria) from the circle of the Synod’s attributions, and assigned to the civil tribunals. They were matters which, of their own nature, belong more to the State than to the Church of Jesus Christ, more to civil rights than to faith, such as successions, marriages contracted by force or against the will of the parents, blasphemy, fornication, or such as concern impenitent sinners, and those who neglect to go to confession and to the Holy Communion. Even in these matters, however, with the exception of the two first mentioned, the ecclesiastical penance was determined by the ecclesiastical authority.’<sup>2</sup>

Finally, after having so determined what matters ought to be left to the jurisdiction of the Synod, and what tried before the civil tribunals, on the 11th of May, 1722, Peter the Great issued the following decree, which we quote literally, and in extenso, as a model of precision, laconism, and strength:—‘For the Synod, let there be chosen from among the OFFICERS a good man, who possesses boldness, and knows how to direct the affairs of the Synod. This officer shall be the Chief Procurator of the Synod; and there shall be given to him an Instruction, analogous to that of the General Procurator (of the Senate).’<sup>3</sup>—The

<sup>1</sup> Полн. Собр. tom. vi. (3963) April 12, 1722, p. 650.

<sup>2</sup> Filaret, Ист. русск. церк. Loc. cit. pp. 4, 5.

<sup>3</sup> Въ Синодъ выбрать изъ Офицеровъ добраго человѣка, кто бѣ имѣлъ емѣлость и могъ управленіе Синодскаго дѣла знать, и быть ему Оберъ-Прокуроромъ и дать ему

'Instruction' here alluded to, and of which we are presently going to speak in detail, bears the date of the 13th of June, 1722.

In less than two years Peter had thus carried out the most radical revolution which could be accomplished in the Russian Church without causing her to cease to be orthodox. Though deeply deploring the illegitimacy and injustice of Peter's enterprise, one cannot but admire the stupendous activity of his genius, nor can anything be more suitably compared to it than the stupendous docility of the bishops of Russia. Nay, whatever the arguments may be, by which it has been attempted to justify Peter and the Russian Church, the wonderful condescension of the Russian bishops to the will of the Tsar forcibly involves the abdication on their side, not only of their right to be the rulers of the Church, but even of their personal dignity. These two assertions are so weighty as to oblige us to allege arguments in support of both of them. We begin with the latter.

No one of our readers surely omitted to notice the peculiar style of Peter's ukases, which we purposely quoted. Never had any Pope spoken in a more authoritative manner, nor shown in his words a fuller conviction of the legitimacy of his power, than does Peter in the before-quoted ukases. HE abolishes the patriarchate; HE appoints a Spiritual College, to be added to that of Mines and Manufactures; HE entrusts it with the direction of all spiritual affairs throughout Russia; HE orders his subjects, of whatever rank and condition, spiritual as well as temporal, to recognise the Spiritual College as a legitimate power; HE enforces his will by the sanction of severe punishments; HE requires the Spiritual College to complete their 'Regulation,' but not without his consent; HE fixes the form of oath to be taken by the members of the Synod. All this HE does, HE alone, without even mentioning, as the Popes generally do in the most important affairs, that he has availed himself of the advice of others.<sup>1</sup> As to the Bishops, the divinely-instituted governors, pastors, chiefs, heads of the Church, they who, consequently, were immediately concerned in the establishment of the Synod, they are alluded to, it is true, yet not as advisers, but as entering into the composition of the flock of Peter's faithful subjects, of whatever rank and condition, spiritual as well as temporal!!

инструкцію, примѣнясь къ инструкціи Генераль-Прокурора. Полн. Собр. tom. vi. (4001) May 11, 1722, p. 676.

The mere style of Peter is also an outrage to them, and they, the rulers of the Church, 'they bow their neck to the worst kind of tyranny'! Yet more ought to be said.

The signatures of nineteen Bishops appear at the end of the 'Spiritual Regulation.' Those English readers who know the Russian Church only by the writings of Neale, or by Mouravieff's 'History of the Church of Russia,' translated by the Rev. R. W. Blackmore, or by some other works written with the view of supporting the State Church of Russia, can hardly realise the depth of humiliation into which Russian bishops were forced to descend, in order to comply with the will of Peter, and to allow their signatures to be attached to the 'Spiritual Regulation.' They themselves subscribed, among others, articles such as the following:—'Because the above said duties (of the bishops) are not to be well understood, without great application to reading; and it being uncertain whether every one of them will love reading or no, an order therefore will be issued out of the Spiritual College

<sup>1</sup> This Peter does in his letter to the Patriarch of Constantinople, written for the purpose of obtaining from him the recognition of the accomplished fact. What reliance may be placed upon Peter's assertion will appear from what we shall presently say on the subject.

TO ALL BISHOPS, that every one of them have the Canons read at his table which concern himself; only this reading may be omitted on some great festivals, or when some honourable guests are present, or for some other just reason.<sup>1</sup> And again, on the subject of the visitation of the eparchie or diocese:—‘When the chanting (or service) is ended, he (the bishop) is to preach a sermon to the clergy and people on true repentance, and the duties of every order, especially the sacerdotal. And there, on the spot, he shall require and exhort everyone to propose to him his spiritual wants and doubts to be resolved; and also whatever is anywhere observed to want a regulation amongst the clergy. And because every BISHOP is not learned enough to compose a set discourse, the Spiritual College therefore will frame such a charge as the BISHOPS shall read over (prochityvat) in the churches they visit.’<sup>2</sup>

So far as to personal dignity. Possibly, on account of the prodigious variety of men’s feelings and inclinations, there may be some one who does not see how personal dignity can be concerned with Peter’s arbitrary dealings on ecclesiastical matters, and the extreme tractability of the Russian bishops. As, after all, this is matter of taste, we shall not farther dwell thereon, but hasten to speak of the abdication by the Russian bishops of their right to be the rulers of the Church.

Yet, before closely entering on the matter, we are glad to state that, according to a most reliable document, an appearance at least of resistance made by the Russian clergy to the encroachments of Peter was not entirely wanting, and we believe that the resisters were bishops. We were the more delighted on meeting with that document, because the official publications of the Russian Church, as well as many works published abroad with a view to exalt her, seem to pursue, as the accomplishment of a duty, the plan of concealing any such attempts at resistance as would confer honour on the Russian bishops, thus making them appear to be like those canes muti spoken of in Isaias: 'They are all dumb dogs, they cannot bark' (Is. lvi. 10).

<sup>1</sup> Spir. Reg. part ii. ‘Of the Bishops.’ No. 3. Consett, p. 35. Полн. Собр. том. vi. p. 322.

<sup>2</sup> ‘On the Visitation,’ etc. No. 3, Consett, p. 55. Полн. Собр. loc. cit. p. 328.

It is well known that during the reign of Catherine II. Voltaire was in great favour at the court of St. Petersburg. The orthodox Empress commissioned the French philosopher to compile a history of Peter the Great, and caused him to be supplied with every document which might be required. Peter's ecclesiastical reformation could not, of course, be passed by, and an especial memorial 'On the Russian Church and her Reformation by Peter the Great,' was consequently handed to Voltaire. A large portion of that memorial was published some years ago in Leipzig, under the title of 'Mémoire inédit sur la réforme de l'Église russe, envoyé par Catherine II à Voltaire.' Wolf. Gerhard, 1863, 8vo. The preface says: 'Ce mémoire a été trouvé dans les papiers de Jean Schouvaloff, chargé par Catherine II de fournir à Voltaire les documents pour l'histoire de Pierre I et de la Russie. Nous tenons le manuscrit original des héritiers de Jean Schouvaloff, ce favori de l'impératrice Élisabeth et Mécène russe, selon l'expression des poètes et des chroniqueurs de son époque.'

This document was by no means an unpublished one. According to Haigold (pseudonymous of Aug. Ludw. Schlözer), the very original and complete manuscript sent to Voltaire was in the year 1769 still preserved in the public library of Geneva, where one of Haigold's friends, having discovered it, made a copy thereof, which Haigold translated into German, and published in the first volume of his 'Beilagen zum neuveränderten Russland. Riga und Mittau, 1769,' 12mo., pp. 1-70.<sup>1</sup> We happened also to find an English translation of it in the work of John Glen King, who was chaplain to the British factory at St. Petersburg: 'The Rites and Ceremonies of the Greek Church in Russia': London, 1772; 4to.<sup>2</sup> From him we quote the following passage on the establishment of the Synod of St. Petersburg:

'On the death of the (tenth) patriarch (of Moscow, Adrian, d. A.D. 1700), Peter deferred nominating another, on account of the troubles occasioned by the war; but HE gave the administration of the affairs of the patriarchate to Stephen Jaworsky, metropolitan of Rezan, a man of learning and a foreigner,<sup>3</sup> and for that reason supposed to be less apt to make a bad use of the trust reposed in him. His title was Exarch, or Vicegerent of the Patriarchal See; but the government of the exarchy was very different from what it was under the patriarchs; small and daily occurrences were the only business which came before him; all affairs of importance were brought before the Sovereign, or an assembly composed of the other bishops, to deliberate upon them. These bishops resided by turns at Moscow, and sometimes were summoned on purpose. . . . In the meantime Peter constantly meditated upon introducing a better form of ecclesiastical government, though the clergy had not given over the hopes of having their patriarch restored; nay, some even entered into intrigues for that purpose, of which the exarch himself was suspected; but all their endeavours proved vain. At length Peter the Great declared, in a full assembly of the most eminent and distinguished clergy, that HE thought a patriarch to be neither necessary for the administration of the Church, nor expedient for the State, and therefore HE had determined to introduce another form of ecclesiastical government, which should keep the medium between that of a single person and General Councils, both of which were liable to many inconveniences, on account of the great extent of the empire; and this new mode was to be a constant Council or Synod. Some of the clergy remonstrated upon this, asserting that as the patriarchate had been established in Russia not only by the consent of his predecessors, but with the concurrence of all the Oriental patriarchs, it could only be abolished by the same authority. But such arguments had no weight. Peter understood his own rights too well.<sup>1</sup> ‘Ce que je viens de rapporter’ (adds the above-mentioned ‘Mémoire’ only), ‘je ne l’ai point trouvé dans des mémoires écrits, mais je le tiens de quelques personnes très-dignes de foi, qui sont encore en vie, et qui peuvent en rendre témoignage.’

<sup>1</sup> Under the title of Russische Kirchen- und Reformations-Geschichte bis auf Peter den Grossen, in seven chapters, of which only four and a half are given in the French Mémoire inédit.

<sup>2</sup> Under the title of History of the Russian Church and its Reformation by Peter the Great, in seven chapters, just as the German translation of Haigold (pp. 433-468). King, however, does not mention either from whom he had this 'history,' or the author of it, or for what purpose it was drawn up. A German translation of King's work was published in Riga, under the title of Gebräuche und Ceremonien der griechischen Kirche in Russland. 1773. 4to.

<sup>3</sup> . . . 'mais puisque il était Polonais.' (Mém. inéd., p. 17, § 15. . . . 'der dabei ein Ausländer war.' (Haigold, Beilagen, etc. i. p. 18.)

In his ‘Histoire de l’Empire de Russie sous Pierre le Grand,’ Voltaire did not relate this attempt at opposition to the despotism of the Tsar. He was, in fact, reproached because he did not make use, as he should have done, of the precious documents forwarded to him; and the celebrated German critic Ant. Fried. Büsching goes so far as to show some regret that this history of Peter had not been written by John Schouvaloff himself, instead of Voltaire.<sup>1</sup> Again, how could such an attempt have any importance for a writer who equally despised every Christian Church, and for whom the power of bishops and ecclesiastical jurisdiction were merely conventional words, invented by men in order to support an edifice of hypocrisy!<sup>2</sup> Fortunately, however, the fact is stated in such a document as not to allow anybody to doubt of its authenticity. Moreover,

<sup>1</sup> King, pp. 440, 441; Haigold, pp. 17–21; Mémoire inédit, pp. 17–20. The last words, which we have underlined, run in French as follows:—‘On aurait pu faire de pareilles représentations avant le temps de Pierre le Grand, mais ce prince connaissait trop le pouvoir que les lois divines et humaines lui accordaient, pour se rendre à leur sentiment.’ Haigold translates them more emphatically:—‘Aber solche Schlüsse galten nur in alten Zeiten. Peter kannte die Rechte seiner Majestät.’

<sup>1</sup> See Geschichte des russischen Reiches unter Peter dem Grossen. Uebersetzt von Jo. Mich. Hube, herausgegeben von Dr. Ant. Fried. Büsching (Frankfurt, 1761), Vorrede, pp. 3, 4.

<sup>2</sup> Voltaire's History of Peter the Great offers many proofs of the inconsistency of his principles, if not rather of the mean-spiritedness of the pretended philosopher and his cowardice towards the puissant 'Semiramis of the North.' Leaving some instances to which public attention has been already drawn, we bring forward the following. No one, perhaps, of Peter's numerous orders concerning ecclesiastical matters had been urged by the Tsar with greater severity than that in force of which (English readers will wonder at it) the normal state of the monks ought to be ignorance, and science and cultivation of the mind the exception! . . . .

'Monks are not to transcribe any writings in the cells, neither copies out of books nor out of their records, without the privity of the principal, on pain of a severe corporal punishment; nor to write to anyone, nor to receive a letter without his permission; and, by the rules both spiritual and civil, are not to have ink and paper more than what is specially allowed by the principal or abbot for their common spiritual use. And this guard against monks is especially necessary, because nothing so much disturbs the monastic solitude as their superstitious and mischievous writings; but if one of the brethren has some urgent occasion for a letter, he must write it at the table, out of the common ink-horn, and on the common paper, with the principal's leave, and not presume to do this of his own accord.' (Conssett, pp. 173, 174. Полн. Собр. vi. p. 712).

That strange prescription had been among the subjects of Peter's nominal (именный directly emanating from the sovereign) ukase of the 31st January, 1701 (Полн. Собр. tom. iv. (1834) pp. 139, 140; it had been again enforced as a rule for the monks in the Appendix to the 'Spiritual Regulation' (Cons. p. 173, No. 36. Полн. Собр. tom. vi. (4022), p. 712; and then, we find in F. Gagarin's quoted work, 'Le Clergé russe,' pp. 291-2, that, 'Dans un article publié le 8 sept. 1862, dans la Causerie ecclésiastique, sous la signature du P. Athanase, il est dit à propos de ce Concile (pour l'approbation du Synode): "Sans doute, ceux qui y assistèrent ne consentirent pas tous et immédiatement à la proposition de Pierre . . . mais la volonté du Tzar, soutenue par quelques ecclésiastiques, l'emporta." This article, as F. Gagarin remarks, appeared with the approbation of the ecclesiastical censors.

Perhaps, if it happen that some Russian bishops become acquainted with these pages, they will take into serious consideration an objection against the establishment of the Synod, alleged in 'a full assembly of the most eminent and distinguished clergy of Russia,' and to which no other answer was given by Peter than Luther's historical answer, when convicted of a wilful addition to the text of the Holy Scripture, in order to support his doctrine of justification, 'So I will, so I command; let my will stand for reason.'<sup>1</sup> Perhaps they will feel disgusted with the bantering strain in which the fact is again it had formed the only subject of Peter's nominal ukase, made known by the Synod, of the 19th February, 1723 (ИО.И. Собр. tom. vii. (4146) p. 16.

Now, the asserted philosopher, and deadly adversary of ignorance in the West of Europe, has not a single word to condemn a Tsar, forbidding, as a rule, to the less ignorant of his subjects the use of ink and paper, but rather seems to approve this measure. Let us listen to Voltaire's words:—'La Russie était inondée de moines; ils étaient riches, puissants, et quoique très-ignorants ils étaient à l'avènement de Pierre presque les seuls qui sussent écrire; ils en avaient abusé dans les premiers temps, où ils furent si étonnés et scandalisés des innovations que faisait Pierre en tout genre. Il avait été obligé en 1703 (? 1701) de défendre l'encre et la plume aux moines: il fallait une permission expresse de l'archimandrite, qui répondait de ceux à qui il la donnait. Pierre voulut que cette ordonnance subsistât.' (Hist. etc. chap. xiv.) And nothing else.

<sup>1</sup> Where St. Paul in his Epistle to the Romans, says: 'For we account a man to be justified by faith without the works of the law' (Rom. iii. 28), Luther had translated 'justified by faith alone:' 'So halten wir es related in a document which almost directly emanated from an orthodox Empress of Russia; and a salutary feeling of shame, because of the weakness of Peter's opponents, will lead them to consider how to make amends for the sin of their predecessors, and restore to their divine and inalienable rights the bishops, successors of the Apostles, chiefs and heads of the Church.

Indeed, that document alone bears sad evidence to the fact we have undertaken to demonstrate, that the Russian bishops' condescension to the will of Peter forcibly involves the abdication on their part of the right conferred upon them by the Orthodox 'Expositions of faith,' of being rulers of the Church. Peter's crafty policy, in the way of bringing about the establishment of the Synod, as well as his real contempt for the divine authority of the bishops, are there stated in the most conspicuous and undeniable manner. The reader has just been told how Peter answered the objection that, in order to abolish the Russian patriarchate, there was required the previous consent of all the Oriental patriarchs. Once, however, that the Synod was established and proclaimed to the people throughout all Russia, Peter displayed an active zeal in order to obtain from the Oriental patriarchs its recognition. A celebrated nun das der Mensch gerecht werde ohne des Gesetzes Werk, allein durch den Glauben.' This addition being made a subject of reproach to the Reformer, Luther, in a letter of the 8th September, 1530, to Wenceslaus Link, expressed himself on the subject in the following sublime terms: 'If your Papist (Emser) takes great offence at the word "sola," say to him immediately: "Dr. Martin Luther's will is, that it be so, and says: Papist and donkey are one thing—sic volo, sic jubeo, sit pro ratione voluntas." ' (Wenn euer Papist sich viel unnütze machen will, mit dem Worte (SOLA, allein), so sagt ihm flugs also: "Doctor Martin Luther wills also haben, und spricht: Papist und Esel sey ein Ding, sic volo, sic jubeo, sit pro ratione voluntas, etc." . . .) Luther's sämtliche Schriften, edit. by Walch. Halle in Magdeb. tom. xxi., 1749., 4to. Letter 310, § 6, p. 314. According to Walch, the same letter is to be found in the previous editions of Luther's works, as follows; Jen. tom. v., 161; Wittemb., iv. 474; Alt., v. 268; Leipz., xii. 90.

historian of the Russian Church suggests to us a fair explanation of that apparent contradiction: 'This conciliary (sobornoe) form of government,' so says A. N. Mouravieff, 'was proclaimed to the people throughout all Russia; but there still needed, in order to its permanent establishment, the recognition of the other Eastern Churches, that the unity of the Catholic Church might not be violated.'<sup>1</sup> The meaning of these words is quite clear, if one only remembers that the Oriental Orthodox Church is to be likened, as to her form of government, to A CONFEDERATION OF DIFFERENT STATES, each of them independent of the rest. The unity of the Catholic (Orthodox) Church, to which allusion is made in Mouravieff's words, was and could be only a unity of charity and friendship.<sup>2</sup> The new form of ecclesiastical government introduced by Peter in Russia needed the recognition of the Oriental patriarchs, just as, in political society, every new Government, be

<sup>1</sup> Blackmore: A History of the Church of Russia, by A. N. Mouravieff, (Oxford, 1842), p. 285.

Обнародовано было сіе соборное правительство по всей Россіи но еще требовалось, для вѣчной твердости онаго, признание прочихъ Восточныхъ церквей, дабы ненарушимо было единство католической Церкви (Исторія Россійской Церкви. Спб. 1840, p. 376.

<sup>2</sup> Q. How does it agree with the unity of the Church, that there are many separate and independent Churches, as those of Jerusalem, Antioch, Alexandria, Constantinople, Russia?

A. These are particular Churches, or parts of the one Catholic Church; the separateness of their visible organisation does not hinder them from being all spiritually great members of the one body of the universal Church—from having one Head, Christ, and one spirit of faith and grace. This unity is expressed outwardly by unity of creed and by communion in prayer and sacrament.

Q. What hierarchical authority is there which can extend its sphere of action over the whole Catholic Church?

A. An Œcumenical Council. (The Longer Catechism of Mgr. Filaret, translated by the Rev. R. W. Blackmore, part i., on the IX Art. of the Creed, in Blackmore's The Doctrine of the Russian Church (Aberdeen, 1845), pp. 77-83.

it a commune, an aristocracy, or a monarchy, needs the recognition of the other Governments, in order to keep up friendly relations with them. The Oriental Orthodox Church presents, in the way in which she is governed, the most striking analogies to civil and political society, as we shall fully explain in the third chapter of this book; no wonder that she should also, like the latter, present to us the phenomena of revolutions and coups d'état. Of this last kind was the establishment of the Synod. Peter the Great knew well how to appreciate and to bring into practice the theory of accomplished facts. To ask the previous consent of the Oriental patriarchs would have been, on Peter's side, an act of most awkward and mistimed simplicity, which might have greatly compromised the success of his enterprise. This explains the rudeness of his behaviour in the assembly of the clergy. But once that this danger was over, once that all his plans had been carried into execution, Peter showed himself anxious to obtain from the anciently-established Government of the Oriental Orthodox Church the recognition of the new one he had just brought about. He himself wrote, on the 30th of September, 1721, to the Patriarch of Constantinople, informing him that 'amongst the many cares which the empire committed to Him by God required for the good government of His hereditary kingdoms and conquests, casting His eye on the Spiritual Order, and observing in them great irregularity, and a great defect in their proceeding, He would indeed have been afflicted in His conscience, and have had too just cause to fear lest He appear to be guilty of ingratitude to the Most High, if after, by His gracious assistance, He had happily succeeded in a regulation both military and civil . . . ' and so on, in the very same terms used in the above-quoted ukase of the 25th of January, 1721 (p. 22). Here, however, Peter declared that he had beforehand taken the advice of counsellors, both ecclesiastical and civil! . . .<sup>1</sup> The answer of the Patriarch of Constantinople bears the date of the 23rd of September, 1723, two years and eight months after the establishment of the Synod, and the approbation of the other Oriental patriarchs accompanied or followed that of the Patriarch of Constantinople.

Let us now suppose that the Oriental patriarchs had refused to comply with the wishes of Peter, would he then have abolished the newly-created synod and restored the patriarchate? Just as little as it may be expected from some one who has just succeeded in transforming a republic into a monarchy, and in causing himself to be elected its king, that he would abdicate the newly-acquired dignity, and restore the republic—only because small States, from which he has nothing to fear, refuse to recognise the accomplished fact. No one, we believe, will be able to contradict our assertion; Peter's character and whole behaviour in this affair was a guarantee for the steadiness of his resolution. 'Le dessein de Pierre,' says Voltaire, 'était d'établir un conseil de religion toujours subsistant qui dépendit du souverain, et qui ne donnât de lois à l'Église que celles qui seraient approuvées par le maître de l'État dont l'Église fait partie. . . Il pensait et il disait publiquement que l'idée des deux puissances (la spirituelle et la temporelle) fondée sur l'allégorie de deux épées qui se trouvèrent chez les apôtres, était une idée absurde. . . . Je trouve dans des mémoires curieux composés par un officier fort aimé de Pierre le Grand, qu'un jour qu'on lisait à ce prince le chapitre du Spectateur anglais qui contient un parallèle entre lui et Louis XIV, il dit après l'avoir écouté: " Je ne crois pas mériter la préférence qu'on me donne sur ce monarque, mais j'ai été assez heureux pour lui être supérieur dans un point essentiel, j'ai forcé mon clergé à l'obéissance et à la paix, et Louis XIV s'est laissé subjugué par le sien." If we quote Voltaire, it is only because his history of Peter, as has been already remarked, was almost dictated by Catherine II., so that it may be considered as a faithful echo of the opinions and feelings of the Court of St. Petersburg at that time. Yet we needed not the authority of Voltaire's history, nor that of any other writer,<sup>1</sup> in order to be convinced that Peter aimed at making his clergy the most obedient and subservient the world had ever seen. A cursory glance at some chief features of Peter's ecclesiastical legislature, still in force, is, alas! more than sufficient. These we are now going to make the reader acquainted with, setting aside whatever may personally concern Peter or his intentions.

<sup>1</sup> Царская и патриаршія грамоты о учрежденіи Святѣйшаго Синода. Спб. 1838, pp. 2, 3. Τὰ τοῦ εὐσεβεστάτου Βασιλέως καὶ τῶν ἀγιοτάτων Πατριάρχων γράμματα περὶ τῆς συστάσεως τῆς ἀγιοτάτης Συνόδου. (Athens, 1844), p. 4. See above, pp. 33–35.

In quoting Peter's ukase of the 25th of January, 1721, for the establishment of the Holy Synod, we promised to return to the special oath taken by the members of the Spiritual College, and to which allusion is made in the just-mentioned ukase. The formula of oath is very long, and in its greatest part identical with that forced upon the members of the other colleges.<sup>2</sup> There is, however, an <sup>1</sup> It is worthy of remark that the Protestant historians of Peter marvellously agree in considering his ecclesiastical reformation as we do, though praising him for it. As an instance, King, after having given an account of the Holy Synod and its organisation, adds, 'These are such effectual checks to the power of the clergy, that no prince in the world can have less to fear from them.'—The Rites and Ceremonies, &c., p. 428.

<sup>2</sup> This document being of the greatest importance, because of the contests to which it gave rise, we prefer quoting it in extenso:—

'I, undernamed, promise and swear by Almighty God, on His Holy Gospel, that I am in duty bound, and according to my duty will and shall every way endeavour, in the counsels, judgments, and in all the proceedings of this Spiritual Legislative Synod, at all times to search out the very addition which solely and exclusively concerns the members of the Spiritual College. It reads as follows:—

truth and right, and to act in all things conformably to the rules or canons prescribed in the Spiritual Regulation. And if any canons shall hereafter be decreed by the suffrage and concurrence of this Spiritual Government (сего Духовнаго Правительства) and with the consent of His Imperial Majesty (соизволениемъ Царскаго Величества); these I will act by, according to my conscience, without respect of persons, free from enmity, emulation, and strife. And plainly to be influenced by no kind of fears, but that of God, always keeping in mind his unsearchable judgments, with a sincere love of God and of my neighbour; proposing the glory of God, the salvation of the souls of men, and the edification of the whole Church (всей Церкви), as the ultimate scope and end of my thoughts, words, and actions, not seeking my own, but what is Jesus, the Lord's.

‘I swear also, by the living God, that, always remembering His tremendous word, “Everyone is accursed who does the work of God negligently,” I will apply myself to every affair of this Legislative Synod, as to a work of God, industriously, and with all diligence, to the utmost of my power, wholly disregarding my own pleasure and ease. And I will not pretend ignorance; but if I am doubtful in any case, I will labour diligently to come at the right understanding and knowledge of it, by searching into the Holy Scriptures, examining the canons and decrees of Councils, and taking into consideration the unanimous consent of the great and primitive doctors.

‘I again swear by Almighty God, that I will, and am in duty bound to continue a faithful, good, and obedient servant, and subject to my natural and true Tsar and Sovereign, Peter the First (Первому) Autocrat (Самодержцу) of all Russia, etc., and after him to His Imperial Majesty's august lawful successors, who, by the will and uncontrollable autocratical (самодержавной) power of His Imperial Majesty are appointed, or shall hereafter be appointed, and qualified to ascend the throne; and to her Sovereign Majesty the Empress Catharine Alexievna. And every right, prerogative, or pre-eminence belonging to the supreme sovereignty, power, and dominion of His Imperial Majesty, which is legal, or shall hereafter be legally established, to guard and defend with the best of my skill, power, and ability, and, if need be, with my life and fortune. And moreover, with the greatest constancy endeavour (стараться) to promote everything that can in any way contribute to the faithful service and interest of His Imperial Majesty. As to any diminution of, or detriment and damage to His Majesty's interests, as soon as I am acquainted with it I will endeavour not only to discover it in due time, but by all means to remedy or put a stop to it. And when, for the service and interest of

‘I confess (acknowledge) upon oath, that the monarch of all Russia himself, our most gracious Sovereign, IS THE SUPREME JUDGE OF THIS SPIRITUAL COLLEGE.’

These words speak fairly enough for themselves. So, then, the pretended authority of the Russian Church meets, in the discharge of her functions, with another authority as superior to her as a judge is superior to those upon whom he is going to pronounce a sentence!

And in order that no one might mistake as to the natural meaning of these words, or even venture to contest it, by alleging, for instance, that the quoted words—‘ne se rapportent qu’aux membres du Saint Synode en leur qualité de sujets, de dignitaires de l’État, de membres d’une assemblée mixte qui a un double caractère religieux et civil,’ and that ‘le serment du Saint Synode se rapporte seulement à l’existence extérieure de l’Église et au souverain comme chef politique,’<sup>1</sup>—Peter the Great or-

His Majesty, or the Church, I am privy to any secret affair, or whatever kind it is which I am commanded to keep a secret, I will keep it with perfect secrecy, reveal it to no person living who is not concerned to know it, and to whom I am not required to disclose it.

‘I ACKNOWLEDGE upon oath that the monarch of all Russia himself, our most gracious Sovereign, is THE SUPREME JUDGE of this Spiritual College. (Исповѣдую же съ клятвою крайнаго Судію Духовныя сея Коллегіи, быти Самаго Всероссійскаго Монарха, Государя нашего Всемилостивѣйшаго).

‘I farther swear by the all-seeing God, that all the particulars I have now sworn to I do not only explain and understand in my mind as I have uttered them with my mouth, but in the force and sense, whatever force and sense it is, which the words here written do express to those that hear and read them.

‘I assert upon oath, God the Observer of hearts being Witness of my oath, that it is no lie. If it is a lie and not from my conscience, let the same righteous Judge be my avenger.

‘In confirmation of this my oath, I kiss the words and cross of my Saviour.—Amen.’ Consett, pp. 6–10. (Полн. Собр. tom. vi. (3718) pp. 314, 315.

<sup>1</sup> Discussion entre Mgr. l’évêque de Nantes et M. l’archiprêtre Wassilieff au sujet de l’autorité ecclésiastique dans l’Église de Russie (Paris, 1861). 8vo.

dained that the words: 'I acknowledge upon oath that the monarch of all Russia himself is the SUPREME JUDGE of this Spiritual College,' should, as we have already remarked, solely and exclusively be inserted in the formula of oath taken by the members of the Spiritual College, as nothing of the kind is to be found in the formula of oath previously prescribed to the members of the other Colleges. Moreover, still in order to shut out even the possibility of any explanation which might not agree with the natural meaning of the quoted words, Peter ordained that the members of the Holy Synod alone must, before concluding their oath, swear as follows: <sup>1</sup> 'I farther swear by the all-seeing God, that all the particulars I have now sworn to I do not only explain and understand in my mind as I have uttered them with my mouth, but in the force and sense, whatever force and sense it is, which the words here written do express to those that hear and read them.'

But let us go on, as what we are successively going to state will more and more throw light on every previous statement, and afford new proofs of them. We shall now speak of the Chief Procurator of the Synod, that dignitary appointed by Peter's ukase of the 11th of May, 1722, which we have quoted in extenso (p. 27).

We are not aware if it has been sufficiently pointed out that the Instruction given by Peter to the Chief Procurator (Ober-Procurator) of the Synod, (and which, being still in force, is to be seen in every edition of the 'Spiritual Regulation,') is identical word for word with that given by him to the General Procurator of the Senate only with the necessary substitution of the word Synod for that of Senate. Whoever is acquainted with the Russian language, and desires to make such comparison for himself, will find both 'Instructions' in vol. vi. of the 'Complete Collection of the Laws,' etc.<sup>1</sup> From this single, yet two-faced, Instruction we quote the following explanation of the rights equally exercised by the Tsar both over the Senate, through its General Procurator, and over the Synod through its Chief Procurator. 'The General Procurator of the Senate (the Chief Procurator of the Synod) being appointed through this charge as Our (the Tsar's) OWN EYE, and the advocate of the affairs of the State, must behave with fidelity, because it is against him that proceedings will be first taken' (Art. 11). 'The General Procurator of the Senate (the Chief Procurator of the Synod) is bound to assist at the sittings of the Senate (of the Synod), and to have a watchful eye on the Senate (Synod), that it fulfil its duty, and that the affairs submitted to its discussion and decision be carried on conformably to the statutes and ukases, according to truth, with zeal and good order, and without loss of time, unless some legitimate cause prevents him doing his function; and all this he is bound to register in his diary. Moreover, he ought to watch closely that affairs be not merely decided in the sessions, but that whatever has been there decided be effectually put into execution' (Art. 1).

<sup>1</sup> The formula of oath prescribed by Peter to the members of the other Colleges begins with the words 'I (again) swear by Almighty God,' etc. of the formula of oath for the members of the Synod, and runs word for word identically with the last, as far as the words 'I ACKNOWLEDGE upon oath,' etc., instead of which, the members of the other Colleges make a general promise of obedience to their statutes and of fidelity to the Tsar. See ПОЛН. Собр. tom. vi. Генер. Регл. (3534), February 28, 1720, p. 142.

Thus much as to the supervision and control of the Tsar over the proceedings both of the Senate and of the

<sup>1</sup> ПОЛН. СОБР. ЗАКОН. tom. vi. (4036), June 13, 1722, p. 721, and (3979), April 27, 1722, p. 662. The Instruction of the General Procurator to the Senate has, however, one article more concerning the Chief Procurator to the Senate. It runs as follows: 'The Chief Procurator (to the Senate), is the General Procurator's assistant in his business, and is bound to manage it in his absence.'

Holy Synod. What now follows explains in what sense the members of the Holy Synod, according to their oath, ought to consider the Tsar as their SUPREME JUDGE: 'The Procurator is also bound to have a watchful and severe eye upon the Senate (Synod), that it proceed in its functions according to truth and without respect to persons. And if he remarks anything to the contrary, he must, on the spot, make it known to the Senate (Synod) pointing out, without concealment, in what the Senate (Synod) or any of its members do not act as they ought, in order that the matter may be set right. If they do not obey, he is obliged to immediately protest, stay the proceeding of the business, and, if urgent, refer it immediately to Us. If there is no urgency, the affair will be treated in the Senate (Synod) in Our presence, within the week or the month, according to that which will be ordained. The General Procurator (Chief Procurator) ought equally to proceed with prudence and circumspection in his public reports to Us, in order not to bring any discredit on anybody without reason. Hence it is that if any affair on account of which his opinion differs from that of the others, seems to him obscure and offering two different aspects, after having stayed its proceeding by the above-mentioned protest, he must not refer it immediately to Us, but take advice from whomsoever he deems capable of throwing light on the matter. In case he finds that the affair really is as he judged it to be, or that he is unable to clear it any more and to resolve his doubt, he shall refer it to Us, and never later than within a week, unless the thing be evident, and of some urgency, in which case he shall refer it to Us without delay; in the contrary case he shall behave as we have just stated, but no later than within a week, nor excusing himself on account of any impediment, except if We should be absent. In this case, however, he must supply by a report drawn up in the above-mentioned time, and this he shall send up by a special courier. If, by indulging some passion, he draws up a report which is not conformed to truth, he himself will be punished according to the importance of the case' (Art. 2).

It evidently results from these prescriptions that the Tsar is just as much and in the same sense the judge of the Synod and its members as he is the judge of the Senate and its members. In the Synod, as well as in the Senate, the Tsar by HIS EYE, viz., by the Procurator, stops whatever decision is going to be taken not conformably to his will; no doubt or difficulty of importance can be resolved except by Him, and not a single law can even be framed, which has not the previous, at least supposed, consent of the Tsar!—What now follows bears evidence to the degree of liberty and independence which is left to the Synod, in the mere execution even of the laws which did not meet the veto of the Chief Procurator, nor the dissatisfaction of the Tzar, as well as of any ecclesiastical law or canon already existing. 'He it is (the General Procurator for the Senate, and the Chief Procurator for the Synod)—he it is who must have under his direction the Chancery of the Senate (Synod), as well as the clerks attached to it' (Art. 5). 'The Executor of the Senate (Synod) ought to be placed under the direction of the General (Chief) Procurator' (Art. 6).

Indeed, unless we greatly mistake the meaning of the words which are made use of in the single Instruction to the General Procurator of the Senate, and the Chief Procurator of the Synod, the Russian Orthodox Church is undeniably as much enslaved as a Church can possibly be. We cannot conceive how a king may otherwise be more really king and more really govern his people than by the possession and exercise of the legislative and administrative powers (the last of the two comprising also the executive). Now the Executor, or officer charged to enforce the execution of whatever might be ordered by the Synod, ‘agreeably to the will of His Imperial Majesty,’<sup>1</sup> is, like the Executor of the Senate, a layman and, besides, is placed under the direction of the Chief Procurator of the Synod. The Chancery, viz., the office through which the current affairs of the Synod are managed, is, together with all its clerks, under the direction of the Chief Procurator.<sup>2</sup> Further, the legislative power, as we are going to explain more in detail, is entirely in the hands of the Tsar. What is there left, after this, for those members of the Synod who are bishops, and for the Synod itself,—for the asserted permanent council GOVERNING (pravitelstvuiustchi) the Russian Orthodox Church?—Finally no other guarantee is afforded to the Synod against the abuses of power and arbitrary proceedings of its chief Procurator than the recourse to the Tsar. Thus runs the ninth article of the same two-faced Instruction: ‘The general Procurator of the Senate (the Chief Procurator of the Synod) is not subjected to the judgment of anybody but to Ours. And, if, during our absence, he becomes guilty of any great crime, which will not admit of any delay, as for instance of treason, the Senate (the Synod) is empowered to cause him to be arrested and to open an inquiry, entrusting somebody else with his functions; the Senate (Synod), however, is not allowed to subject him to any torture or penalty or chastisement’ (Art. 9).

Behold, then, the Holy Synod at the Chief Procurator’s mercy, and at that of the Tsar or a Tsarina. How can it be believed after this that the Holy Synod is a body really governing the Russian Orthodox Church?

Nay, to the easy assertions of advocates or admirers of the Russian Orthodox Church, let us prefer the sober, exact, and authoritative language of the Russian Code of

<sup>1</sup> Words of the oath taken by the bishops. See further on, p. 66.

<sup>2</sup> See, for the composition of the Chancery attached to the Synod, the Table relative to the law of March 1, 1839 (12,069), in the Appendix to the tom. xiv. of the Полн. Собр. 2nd series.

Law and of the Russian jurists. No one has a real interest in being deceived, and truth alone can really be profitable to Orthodox Russians, as well as to Protestant Englishmen or Catholics of every country. Now, the Russian Code of Laws, as well as the Russian jurists, plainly and fairly states that both the administrative and legislative powers of the Russian Church are in the hands of the Tsar.

The Holy Synod is, it is true, termed 'governing' (pravitelstvuiustchy)<sup>1</sup> in the Russian Code of Laws, but the Senate also is there termed governing, though no one may himself venture to advance that the Russian empire is not governed by the Tsar, but by its Senate. We fairly recognise that the title of governing may, to some extent, be suitably applied to the Synod, that is in the sense in which it is also conferred on the Senate; the Synod and the Senate being the two chief bodies by which the laws are proposed, discussed, elaborated, and drawn up before being presented to the Tsar. But we are enabled to assert that the Synod is no more the real chief ruler of the Russian Church than the Senate is the real chief ruler of the Russian empire. In fact, the Holy Synod is termed governing in the very same (43rd) article already quoted above (p. 20), to which we promised to return, and which runs as follows:—'In the administration of the Church the autocratical authority ACTS BY MEANS of the Most Holy Governing Synod appointed by him.'

When we quoted this article for the first time, we

<sup>1</sup> Правительствующій is officially translated in French by 'Dirigeant' (see Journal de St. Petersbourg, etc.). Yet the common English translation which we have kept, agrees with the principal signification of the verb правительствовать, which is thus explained in the Dictionary of the Academy of St. Petersburg: 1.) Имѣть правительственную или верховную власть (possess the supreme authority; 2.) Управлять (administer).—Слов. церковно-слав. и русск. языка сост. ii отд. Имп. Акад. Наукъ. Спб. 1847. See, further on, the quotation of Speranski, p. 50, note 3.

pointed out that, according to it, the Synod is a mere organ or instrument by means of which the Tsar governs the Church. The expressions we made use of, however strong they may appear, are not of our invention; they are to be found in the well-known 'Course of Jurisprudence, according to the programme approved for the instruction in the military establishments of Russia,' by Mich. Mikhailoff.<sup>1</sup> 'Among the rights of the supreme authority (so says Mikhailoff) the chief place is taken by the legislative and supreme administrative powers' (p. 38).<sup>2</sup> 'As organs (organi) through which the supreme authority acts, as well in the making of laws as in the administration of the State, are the SUBORDINATE authorities and institutions (ustanovlenia) appointed by him' (p. 21). 'The supreme administrative authority acts in the State by means of special instruments (orudia) or organs (organs), which are called institutions (ustanovlenia)' (p. 38).<sup>3</sup>

Then (pp. 71 et seq.) the same author, in a special chapter termed, 'Of the Highest Institutions: the Council of State—the Governing Senate—the Most Holy Synod,' speaks in detail of each of the three: 'The supreme authority,' so he begins, 'acts in the administration of the affairs of the State through the organs appointed by itself,

<sup>1</sup> Курсъ Законовѣдѣнія по программѣ утвержденной для руководства въ военно-учебныхъ заведеніяхъ. Спб. 1861.

<sup>2</sup> Въ составѣ правъ Верховной Власти первое мѣсто занимаетъ Власть законодательная и Власть Верховнаго Управленія.

<sup>3</sup> Органами чрезъ которые Верховная Власть дѣйствуетъ въ Государствѣ какъ въ законодательствѣ такъ и въ управленіи служатъ подчиненныя власти и установленія, ею учреждаемыя.

Власть Верховнаго Управленія дѣйствуетъ въ Государствѣ посредствомъ особенныхъ орудій, органовъ, которые называются установленіями.

and called institutions (ustanovlenia).<sup>1</sup> . . . And speaking of the last of them: 'The Most Holy Synod is the Governing Council of the Russian Church, subject to the dominion of the Sovereign, by means of which the supreme autocratical authority acts in the administration of the ecclesiastical affairs concerning the Orthodox Confession.'<sup>2</sup> And a little further on: 'For the conduct of its affairs the Holy Synod possesses a Chancery of its own, dependent on the Chief Procurator, through whom alone every proposition of the Holy Synod ascends to the Sovereign Emperor, and under whose chief direction is placed the administration of the departments of the ecclesiastical property and schools attached to the Synod.'

We confine ourselves to the quoted abstracts out of Mikhailoff's 'Course of Jurisprudence,' confidently referring our readers to any other of the Russian jurists, as they all perfectly agree with him in considering the Synod as he does, that is as a mere State institution, by means of which the Tsar governs the Church, just as he governs the Empire by means of the Senate and the Ministries. 'The supreme authority,' says the celebrated Speranski, 'governs by the institutions appointed by itself; but the institutions administer the affairs entrusted to them according to their rules and statutes.'<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Высшія Установленія.—Государственный Совѣтъ. Правительствующій Сенатъ. Святѣйшій Синодъ.—Власть Верховная въ управленіи Государственными дѣлами дѣйствуетъ чрезъ органы Его устанавлиаемыя именуемыя Установленіями, etc. (p. 71).

<sup>2</sup> Святѣйшій Синодъ есть Правительствующій Россійской церкви Соборъ состоящій подъ Монаршею Державой, посредствомъ коего Верховная Самодержавная Власть дѣйствуетъ въ управленіи церковными дѣлами Православнаго исповѣданія (p. 88).

<sup>3</sup> Власть верховная правитъ (gouverne) установленіями

Moreover, the statements of Russian jurists are but an echo of the principles fairly and plainly laid down in the Russian Code of Law. Let us take a glance at them. It is well known that the colleges established by Peter (one of which was the Spiritual College, or Most Holy Synod), were kept up till the year 1802, when Alexander I., notwithstanding the great advantages alleged by Peter in favour of his administration by means of colleges, declared, that 'For the best management of affairs, he had thought it proper to entrust every separate department of the administration of the State to a separate Minister chosen by him.'<sup>1</sup> The only college which was maintained was the spiritual one, or Holy Synod. See, now, in what terms the Ministries and the Holy Synod are defined in the 'Alphabetical Register' of the Russian Code of Laws, being at the same time a summary of the whole code of laws. We put the two definitions in juxtaposition.

'The Ministries are those State institutions by means of which the supreme executive authority acts in every department of the administration.'<sup>2</sup>

'The Most Holy Synod is that State institution by means of which the supreme autocratical authority acts in the administration of the affairs of the Orthodox Confession.'<sup>3</sup>

ею учрежденными; а установления управляютъ (administrent) дѣлами имъ ввѣренными по уставамъ ихъ и учрежденіямъ. Speranski: Руководство къ познанію законовъ, Спб. 1845, art. 140, p. 90.

<sup>1</sup> Manifesto for the establishment of Ministries in Russia. Полн. Собр. tom. xxvii. Sept. 8, 1802 (20,406), p. 243.

<sup>2</sup> Министерства суть установленія государственныя, посредствомъ коихъ Вер-

<sup>3</sup> Святѣйшій Синодъ есть установленіе государственное, посредствомъ коего

Indeed, unless it be proved that in either of the two definitions the same words do not possess the same identical meaning as in the other, these definitions alone will undeniably prove, against all sophistry, that the Tsar is as much the chief of the Synod as he is the chief of any civil or political institution appointed for the administration of the State. The definitions are identical save in one word. The power which, in reference to the Ministries, is simply called executive, with regard to the Church is called autocratical, in order, it seems, to remind people that, according to the explanation of this word which is alluded to in a note to the first article of the Russian Code of Laws: 'His Majesty is a monarch autocratic, who has not to give a reason for his actions to anybody on earth, but has the power and authority, as Christian Sovereign, to administer his State and country according to his own will and discretion.'<sup>1</sup>

Let us conclude what we have been saying concerning the supreme administrative power of the Tzar, even in

ховная исполнительная
власть дѣйствуетъ на всѣ части управленія. Сводъ Закон.
tom. i. Учр. Мин. ст. 189.

Верховная Самодержавная
власть дѣйствуетъ въ управ-леніи церковными дѣлами
Православной Вѣры. Сводъ.
Закон. tom. i. Зак. осн. ст. 40, 42, 43.

Алфавитный Указатель къ Своду Законовъ Россійской Имперіи изданному въ 1857 году. Спб. 1860, pp. 607 and 1023.

<sup>1</sup> Его Величество есть Самовластный Монархъ, которой никому на свѣтѣ о своихъ дѣлахъ отвѣта дать не долженъ, по силу и власть имѣетъ Свои Государства и земли, яко Христіанскій Государь по своей волѣ и благомнѣнію управлять. (Уставъ Морск. Кн. V. гл. 1. ст. 2 толков. in the Полн. Собр. tom. vi. Jan. 13, 1720 (3485), p. 59. See also Уст. Воин. арт. 20 толк. in tom. v. March 30, 1716 (3006), p. 325.

reference to the Church, by the following article of the same Code of Laws. ‘The administrative power belongs in its entire extent to the Tsar. In the supreme administration his power acts immediately; in matters of inferior administration a definite degree of authority is entrusted by him to some officers and persons acting in his name, and in pursuance of his orders.’<sup>1</sup>

We hasten to speak of the legislative power. This point is of the greatest moment for deciding, we may say, incontestably, all possible questions concerning the real and effectual ruler of the Russian Orthodox Church. ‘By the sovereign power,’ says Blackstone, ‘is meant the MAKING OF LAWS; for wherever this power resides, all other

This explanation is given on account, and as a justification, of the prescription contained in the military and naval statutes that ‘whoever has become guilty of having uttered injurious words against the person of His Majesty, despised his acts and intentions (памѣреніе), and judged them in an unbecoming (непристойнымъ) way, should be beheaded, because (ибо) His Majesty is a monarch autocratic, who is not to give a reason,’ etc.

To the same explanation there is a reference in the 1st article of the Russian Code of Laws, which runs as follows:—

‘The Emperor of all the Russias is a monarch autocratic and unlimited. God Himself commands that one should obey his supreme authority, not only from fear, but also as a matter of conscience.’

Императоръ Всероссійскій есть Монархъ Самодержавный и неограниченный.—Повиноваться верховной Его власти, не токмо за страхъ но и за совѣсть, Самъ Богъ повелѣваетъ.

<sup>1</sup> Власть управленія во всемъ ея пространствѣ принадлежитъ Государю. Въ управленіи верховномъ власть Его дѣйствуетъ непосредственно; въ дѣлахъ же управленія подчиненнаго опредѣленная степень власти ввѣряется отъ Него мѣстамъ и лицамъ дѣйствующимъ Его именемъ и по Его повелѣнію. (Сводъ Зак. ed. 1857, tom. i. Осн. Гос. Зак. art. 80, p. 20.

must conform to and be directed by it, whatever in appearance the outward form of government may be.’<sup>1</sup> ‘LEGISLATURE,’ says another eminent jurist, ‘is the greatest act of superiority that can be exercised by one being over another. Wherefore it is requisite to the very essence of a law that it be made by the supreme power. Sovereignty and legislature are indeed convertible terms: one cannot subsist without the other.’<sup>2</sup> It would be of no use to make analogous quotations out of the Russian jurists, as the matter is sufficiently evident of itself.<sup>3</sup> Let us rather see what is stated in the Russian Code of Laws concerning the composition, explanation, and completion of the laws.

Tome I. ‘Code of the fundamental Laws of the State.’ Article 49. ‘The first draught of the laws is either made through personal advertence of the Sovereign and by his immediate command, or it takes its beginning through the ordinary proceeding of business. This is the case whenever the governing Senate, the Most Holy Synod, or any of the Ministries, after discussion on the matter, deem it necessary either to explain and complete a law already in force, or to draw up a new prescription. In this case the above-named authorities must submit their project to the approbation of the Tsar, in the legal way prescribed for them.’—50. ‘All projects of law are examined in the Council of State: after that they come up for the revision of the Sovereign; and in no other way can they attain their intended fulfilment, unless by an act of the autocratic power.’—51. ‘No authority or administration whatever in the State is entitled to make of itself any new law, and no law whatever can obtain its execution without its being confirmed by the autocratic power.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> The Student's Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England, abridged by Robert Malcolm Kerr. Introd. § 1.

<sup>2</sup> H. J. Stephen's New Commentaries on the Laws of England (London 1841). Introd. § 2, pp. 27, 28.

<sup>3</sup> See Speranski, Mikhaïloff, Nevolin (Энциклопедія законовѣднія), Dobrovolski (Руководство законовѣднія), etc.

These articles need no comment. They concern the Holy Synod as well as the Senate, or any authority whatever of the Russian empire. Let us only recollect Mikhailoff's words: 'As organs (organi) through which the supreme authority acts, as well in the making of laws as in the administration of the State, are the SUBORDINATE authorities and institutions appointed by him,'<sup>2</sup> one of which, as we have already demonstrated, is the Synod itself. Finally, let us not forget what is stated in the ukase of the 25th of January, 1721, for the establishment of the Holy Synod: 'This college must perfect hereafter their "Regulation" with more rules, such as the different occasions of

<sup>1</sup> Art. 49. Первообразное предначертаніе законовъ составляетъ или по особенному Высочайшему усмотрѣнію и непосредственному повелѣнію, или же пріемлетъ начало свое отъ общаго теченія дѣлъ, когда при разсмотрѣніи оныхъ въ правительствующемъ Сенатѣ или Святѣйшемъ Синодѣ и въ Министерствахъ, признано будетъ необходимымъ или пояснить и дополнить дѣйствующій законъ, или составить новое постановленіе. Въ семъ случаѣ мѣста сіи подносятъ предположенія ихъ установленнымъ порядкомъ на Высочайшее благоусмотрѣніе.

Art. 50. Всѣ предначертанія законовъ разсматриваются въ Государственномъ Совѣтѣ, потомъ восходятъ на Высочайшее усмотрѣніе, и не иначе поступаютъ къ предназначенному имъ совершенію, какъ дѣйствіемъ Самодержавной Власти.

Art. 51. Никакое мѣсто или правительство въ Государствѣ не можетъ само собою установить новаго закона, и никакой законъ не можетъ имѣть своего совершенія безъ утвержденія Самодержавной Власти. (Сводъ Закон. Основные Государственные Законы. Разд. i. pp. 12-13.

<sup>2</sup> See above, p. 49.

various affairs shall require; but the Spiritual Collegé must not do this without Our consent'—nor that the members of the Holy Synod promise upon oath to conform themselves besides to the 'Spiritual Regulation;' also 'to any canons which shall hereafter be decreed by the suffrage and concurrence of the Synod, and with the consent of His Imperial Majesty.'<sup>1</sup>

We are now eager to speak of the bishops in their relations to the Synod. In order, however, that not the slightest prejudice may possess the mind of the reader, and prevent him from following without misgiving the course of our argument, we shall here say a few words respecting those limits which are said to be put by the ecclesiastical canons to the will of the Tsar, reserving further remarks on the subject for the second chapter of this book. First of all, let us remark that there are two kinds of canons—the dogmatical ones and the disciplinary. As to the dogmatical canons—that is, those which state the belief of the Church—they not only are by their own nature immutable, but they forcibly require the submission of all that do not wish to be cast out of the Church whose doctrine they express. In this respect the Tsar is on a level with the Pope, in whom we do not recognise any more power to alter the dogmatical canons of the Catholic Church than the least of the faithful has. The question is, therefore, reduced to the disciplinary canons, that is, to the canons concerning the external administration of the Church.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See above (pp. 24 ; 40–1, note). Further evidences as to the legislative power of the Russian Church being fully and exclusively concentrated in the hands of the Tsar will be found further on, especially when we shall treat of the oath taken by the bishops at their consecration.

<sup>2</sup> We leave aside further subdivisions of disciplinary canons, as they are of no use for the present purpose. Much might also be said as to the influence of the Tsars on the doctrine of their Church, as will appear by what we are going to say on the Russian Catechisms. See also pp. 104–106.

As respects these also, we remark that the disciplinary canons of the Russian Orthodox Church are, at any rate, very ancient laws, which existed long before Peter had made up his mind to establish the Synod. They were exhibited in the so-called 'Kormchaia Kniga' (the pilot-book, Gr. Πηδάλιον) a book of much importance, showing by what gross mediæval ignorance and by what curious fables the Greek schism was fixed and popularised in Russia.<sup>1</sup> Since 1839, the Holy Synod, to suit, perhaps, the wishes of German and other writers, that such absurdities should not be reprinted any more, publishes only that part of the 'Kormchaia Kniga' which contains the canons of the Apostles, the Councils, and the Fathers of the Church, under the title of 'Kniga pravil,' or 'Book of the Canons.' These canons, as the reader may be convinced by an inspection of them either in the Russian translation or in the original Greek,<sup>2</sup> are far from

<sup>1</sup> An accurate and very learned account of the Кормчая Книга was given by the celebrated Kopitar in the Jahrbücher der Literatur (Wien, 1823), tom. xxiii. pp. 220-274. Kopitar concludes his account by the following words: 'Möge diese Kormchaia endlich gar nicht mehr gedruckt, sondern über einer ganz andern, zugleich der alten, erleuchteten griechischen Kirche und des Jahrhunderts der heiligen Allianz würdigen, vergessen werden!' Instances of the curiosities of this book are to be found also in Schlosser's Die morgenländische orthodoxe Kirche Russlands und das europäische Abendland (Heidelberg, 1845), p. 92 et seq.

A complete essay on that book was published in 1829 by Rozenkamf. Обозрѣніе кормчей Книги. Moscow, 1829, 8vo.—The British Museum (3356, c.) possesses the edition of the Kormchaia of 1816, that examined by Kopitar, in the volume of the Jahrbücher der Literatur which has been quoted.

<sup>2</sup> The following are the principal canons admitted both in the Greek and in the Russian Orthodox Church. They are to be found, with others of less authority or of less importance, in the Кормчая Книга; and, since 1839, are published in the Книга правилъ Св. Апостоловъ Святыхъ Соборовъ вселенскихъ и помѣстныхъ и Св. Отцевъ. For the reader's convenience we have added references to the Greek Πηδάλιον τῆς νοητῆς νηὸς τῆς μιᾶς ἁγίας καθολικῆς καὶ ἀποστολικῆς τῶν ὀρθοδόξων Ἐκκλησίας ἧτοι ἅπαντες οἱ ἱεροὶ καὶ θεοὶ κανόνες, favouring a Church reformation like that of Peter the Great. Yet the Russian autocrat was too powerful to refrain, on that account, from carrying out his projects.

etc. edit. of Zante, 1864, and to Beveridge's Συνόδικον, sive Pandectæ Canonum, etc. Gr. et Lat. Oxonii. 1672. Folio.

85 canons of the Apostles. Explanation of Aristenus, with various readings.—Beveridge's Συνόδικον, pp. 1-57; Πηδάλιον, pp. 1-122.

17 canons of the Apostle St. Paul.—Bev. ii. at the end of the first part, Cc. 3—Id.

17 canons of the Apostles Peter and Paul.—Bev. ibid.

Two canons of all the Apostles together.—Bev. ibid.

20 canons of the first Œcumenical Council of Nicæa. Aristenus' text and explanation.—Bev. i. 58-84; Πηδάλιον, 123-152.

25 canons of the Council of Ancyra. Zonaras' preface (Bev. i. 375). Aristenus' text and explanation.—Bev. i. 376-401; Πηδάλ. 371-385.

15 canons of the Council of Neocæsarea. Zonaras' and Balsamon's preface (Bev. i. 402). Aristenus' text and explanation.—Bev. i. 402-414; Πηδ. 385-395.

20 canons of the Council of Gangra, out of Zonaras and Aristenus.—Bev. i. 416-428; Πηδ. (21 canons) 395-405.

25 canons of the Council of Antioch.—Bev. i. 429-453; Πηδ. 405-419.

58 canons of the Council of Laodicea.—Bev. i. 453-481; Πηδ. (60 canons) 420-442.

8 canons of the second Œcumenical Council of Constantinople.—Bev. i. 85-98; Πηδ. (7 canons) 153-165.

8 canons of the third Œcumenical Council of Ephesus. Preface (Bev. i. 99). Epistle of the Fathers to all the faithful (Harduini, Collect. Conc. i. 1622). Aristenus' text and explanation.—Bev. i. 99-110; Πηδ. 166-179.

30 canons of the fourth Œcumenical Council of Chalcedon. Preface and Aristenus' explanation.—Bev. i. 111-150; Πηδ. 180-211.

21 canons of the Council of Sardica. Preface out of Zonaras and Balsamon. Aristenus' text and explanation.—Bev. i. 482-508; Πηδ. (20 canons) 443-461.

138 canons of the Council of Carthage.—Bev. i. 509-680; Πηδ. (141 canons) 462-542.

1 canon of the Council held in Constantinople on account of Agapius and Gabadius contending for the Bishopric of Bosra.—Bev. i. 678; Πηδ. (2 canons) p. 461, 462.

An account of the fifth Œcumenical Council.—Πηδ. 211-212.

102 canons of the (quini-sext) Council of Constantinople (held in Trullo).—Bev. i. 152-283; Πηδ. 213-313.

He acted with respect to the ecclesiastical canons in the same way in which a conqueror acts with respect to the laws of the country he has just brought under his power. The Russian autocrat looked over all the ecclesiastical laws of his country; some of them—those which might 22 canons of the seventh Œcumenical Council, second of Nicæa. Aristenus' text and explanation.—Bev. i. 284–330; Πηδ. 314–342.

17 canons of the first and second Councils held in Constantinople in the Church of the Apostles. Zonaras' preface, Aristenus' text and explanation.—Bev. i. 331–359; Πηδ. 343–361.

3 canons of the Council held in St. Sophia's Church in Constantinople. Aristenus.—Bev. i. 360–364; Πηδ. 361–366.

91 canons, out of St. Basilus' epistle to Amphilochius. Aristenus' text and explanation.—Bev. ii. p. i. 47–146; Πηδ. (92 canons), 585–649.

26 canons of St. Basilus, 'De titulo et tempore peccatorum.'—Bev. ii. Append. to the first part, Dd. verso.

Of the same St. Basilus' 'De locis eorum qui puniuntur.'—Bev. ibid. Dd. 2.

St. Basilus' 'De divina gratia et sacra communione' (Bev. ibid. Ee. verso and recto). 'De iis qui pœnas contemnunt.'—Ibid. Ee. verso.

St. Basilus' 'Epistle to Gregory the Theologian, on the monastical life.'—Bas. ep. ii. ed. Garn.

St. Dionysius' (Archbishop of Alexandria) 'De tempore quo in magno Sabbato jejunium solvere oporteat,' and 'De iis qui cum excommunicati fuerint, et pro metu mortis ad communionem admissi, postea convalescunt.'—Bev. ii. Append. to part i. Bb. 2, recto and verso.

St. Peter's (of Alexandria) 14 canons, on those who had fallen during the persecution.—Bev. ibid. Bb. 2. verso; Πηδ. (15 canons far more extensive), 562–575.

St. Gregory the Thaumaturge's (Bishop of Neocæsarea) 13 canons, 'De iis qui in barbarorum incursione fuerint.'—Bev. ibid. Bb. 3; Πηδ. (12 canons more extensive), 551–562.

St. Athanasius' (Archbishop of Alexandria) epistle, 'De somniantibus ad Ammum monachum' (Bev. ibid. Bb. 3. verso), 'ad Rufanum' (Ruffinianum) Bev. ibid. Cc. 3, verso, and 'Libri veteris testamenti sunt,' etc.—Bev. ibid. Bb. 4; Πηδ. 575 et seq.

St. Gregory the Theologian's 'Ex versibus—de iisdem—Prima Genesis,' etc.—Bev. ibid.; Πηδ. 662–664.

St. Amphilochius on the same subject.—Bev. ibid. Bb. 4, verso; Πηδ. 664, 665.

St. Gregory's, of Nyssa, 'Ad Letoium Melitenes Episcopum epistola,' (8 canons).—Bev. ibid. Cc.; Πηδ. 649–662.

put him to trouble—were abrogated by the mere enforcement of the ‘Spiritual Regulation,’<sup>1</sup> as the paramount law of the Orthodox Church of Russia; those which could do him no harm whatever he left in force, and even prescribed with severity their execution. Hence it is that the collection of canons of the Russian Orthodox Church, modified by the ‘Spiritual Regulation,’ by the subsequent ukases of the Tsars, and by the practical interpretations of the Holy Synod,<sup>2</sup> may in its entirety be safely recom-

Timotheus’ (Archbishop of Alexandria) 15 canons.—Bev. ibid. Cc. verso; Пηδ. (18 canons) 665–676.

Theophilus’ (Archbishop of Alexandria) 14 canons.—Bev. ibid. Cc. 2; Пηδ. 676–686.

St. Cyrillus’ (Archbishop of Alexandria) 7 canons out of his letters: ‘Ad Domnum,’ ‘Episcopis qui sunt in Lybia et Pentapoli,’ ‘Ad Maximum Diaconum,’ then ‘Ad Gennadium Cænobii præfectum.’—Bev. ibid. Cc. 2. verso; Пηδ. (5 canons) 686–692.

St. Cyrillus’, ‘De fide orthodoxa contra Nestorium,’ capita xii.—Bev. ibid. Dd. 2.

Out of the epistles of the holy Fathers, against simony. St. Basilus’ ‘Ad Episcopos sibi subjectos ne propter pecunias ordinent’ (Bev. ii. 145). St. Gennadius’ epistle on the same subject (Bev. ii. 181; Пηδ. 692–697), etc.

See also these canons in Card. J. B. Pitra’s work: ‘Juris ecclesiastici Græcorum historia et monumenta, jussu Pii IX. Pont. Max.’ etc. Romæ, 1864–1868. 2 vols. 4to.

<sup>1</sup> It was, we suppose, some feeling of the disagreement existing between the ecclesiastical canons and the Spiritual Regulation, which caused Mgr. Filaret, Arch. of Tchernigoff, to express himself as follows: ‘The Spiritual Regulation, drawn up by Theophane Prokopovich, revised by a Council (that mentioned in the document sent to Voltaire), and confirmed by the Tsar, as an application of the ancient ecclesiastical canons to the condition of the Russian Church (какъ примѣненіе древнихъ церковныхъ правилъ къ состоянію русской церкви), became the law of the Church’ (Ист. русс. Церк. пер. V. § 3, p. 5). A mere application (примѣненіе) of the ecclesiastical canons to the condition of the Russian Church needed not a Council, far less the confirmation of an Orthodox Tsar.

<sup>2</sup> The Complete Collection of the Laws of the Russian Empire contains a nominal ukase of the Empress Elizabeth to the Synod, reminding them that in matters of marriage they must not follow their own particular views, but have their decisions supported by the authority of the Holy Scripture.—Полн. Собр. tom. xiii. 20th Sept., 1752 (10,028), p. 705.

mended to kings jealous of the influence of the Church, as one which does not lay any effectual restraint upon the

As an instance, moreover, of the influence exercised by the Tsar upon the interpretation of the ecclesiastical canons, we shall quote the decision of the Holy Synod concerning the marriage of the Grand-Duke Constantine Paulovich, brother of Alexander I. The Grand-Duke had been married since the 26th of February, 1796, to the Grand-Duchess Anna Feodorovna, Princess of Saxe-Cobourg-Saalfeld. After many years he became desirous to have his marriage dissolved, which desire having been complied with, he married the young Polish Countess Jeanne Grudzinska, afterwards Princess of Lowicz.

The dissolution of the Grand-Duke's first marriage was announced to the people all over Russia in the following Manifesto of the Tsar, March 20, (April 2), 1820:—

‘We make known to all our faithful subjects as follows: Our beloved brother, Cesarevich and Grand-Duke Constantine Paulovich addressed a petition to our most beloved mother, the Empress Maria Feodorovna, and to us, calling our attention to the domestic situation caused by the prolonged absence of his wife, the Grand-Duchess Anna Feodorovna, who having since the year 1801 gone abroad because of her health being utterly broken (по крайне растроенному состоянию Ея здоровья), not only did not afterwards return to him, but will never more be able to return, as she herself has personally declared; and consequently, he (the Grand-Duke) has asked that his marriage with her should be dissolved. Having received such his petition, we, with the consent of our most beloved mother, laid the affair before the examination of the Holy Synod, which, after comparing its circumstances with the prescriptions of the Church, on the precise ground of the 35th canon of St. Basilus the Great (по сличеніи обстоятельствъ онаго съ церковными узаконеніями, на точномъ основаніи 35 правила Василія Великаго), has declared, “The marriage of the Grand-Duke Cesarevich Constantine Paulovich with the Grand-Duchess Anna Feodorovna is dissolved, and he is allowed to contract another marriage, if he so please.” Taking all these circumstances into consideration, we have decided that it would be fruitless to make any attempt to keep within the circle of our imperial family a couple united by a bond which for nineteen years has been broken, and which there is no hope of restoring in future; consequently, making known, on the precise ground of the ecclesiastical prescriptions, our consent that the above declaration of the Holy Synod be carried into effect, we order that the same declaration shall have its purport carried into execution.’—Полн. Собр. Зак. i. ser. tom. xxxvii. (28,208) March 20, 1820, p. 129.

encroachments of the civil power on ecclesiastical matters. This will, moreover, evidently appear from what we shall quote from the Russian catechisms with respect to the theory concerning the power of the Tsar in ecclesiastical matters.

We now proceed to speak of the bishops in their relations to the Synod. To the Synod also—to that authority which, according to the expressions of the Russian jurists, is a mere organ (organ) or instrument (orudie) in the hand of the Tzar—to that State institution (gosudarstvennoe ustanovlenie) by means of which, so says the Russian

Now the canon which is alluded to in the Synod's decision runs in the Кормчая Книга (ed. 1816) as follows:—

‘If a wife quits her husband without reason, she is liable to be punished; as to him who had to endure the dereliction, he will not be so.’ Аще безъ вины оставить жена мужа своего, та убо повинна есть; онъ же претерпѣвъ не повиненъ есть. (Кормч. кн. р. ρξε на об.)

Which canon is thus explained in the Кормчая Книга (by Aristenus):—

‘The wife who quits her husband, and, without reason, absents herself from him, will be separated from the Church (excommunicated) (въ за-прещеніи будетъ), and the more so if she has been with another man, for in that case she will be judged as an adulteress. As to the husband abandoned by her, he deserves pardon, and therefore, if he has taken another wife, he will not be excommunicated.’ (мужъ же оставленный отъ нея, прощенія достойнъ есть, и сего ради аще иную жену пойметъ беззапрещенія есть.—Ibid.) See also Πεδάλιον, ed. Zante, 1864, pp. 612, 613. Beveridge. Συνδίκων seu Pandectæ, etc. Oхоніі, 1672, ii. p. 94.)

Certainly, no amount either of benevolent feeling towards the Holy Synod, or of Christian indulgence for an erroneous interpretation, will allow the reader to believe that the Synod did not in its decision yield to any influence whatever from the Russian autocrat. A writer, whose sympathy for Russia, together with his highly praiseworthy aversion for any exaggeration, are equally known, speaking of that dissolution of the Grand-Duke's marriage, says, ‘En matière ecclésiastique, comme en toute autre, la volonté de l'autocrate ne rencontre pas d'obstacle, le Saint Synode n'y résiste pas plus que les autres grands corps de l'État.’—Schnitzler, Histoire intime de la Russie sous les empereurs Alexandre et Nicolas. (Paris, 1847), tom. i. p. 156.

Code of Laws, the supreme authority acts in the administration of the Church—to that so-called Council in which, by the mere arbitrary will of a Russian Tsar, simple priests are on a level with bishops,<sup>1</sup>—the members of which are appointed, maintained in power, or dismissed by the mere arbitrary will of the Tsar, and which in no way represents the Russian Orthodox Church—to that College, the tenth of Peter's colleges, adapted to the department of Russia's spiritual affairs, just as the others had been adapted to the departments of Russia's commerce, revenue, &c.—to the Synod of St. Petersburg are immediately subject all the bishops throughout Russia. 'Be it known,' it is said in the 'Spiritual Regulation,'—'be it known to every bishop, what degree soever he is of, whether bishop, archbishop, or metropolitan, that he is subordinate to the Spiritual College as to the supreme power, being obliged to obey its orders, to submit to its judgment, and acquiesce in its decrees. And, therefore, if he has a quarrel with another bishop his brother, who has injured him, he must not avenge

<sup>1</sup> 'Si dans la hiérarchie ecclésiastique, il n'y a pas d'ordre plus élevé que celui de l'évêque ; si les évêques sont tous également successeurs des Apôtres, et que, comme les Apôtres avaient tous reçu du Seigneur et possédé le même honneur et le même pouvoir, ainsi leurs successeurs ont une égale dignité, qu'ils résident à Rome, à Constantinople, à Alexandrie, ou autre part, il s'ensuit évidemment qu'une réunion d'évêques peut seule avoir autorité sur un évêque.

'On voit, sans qu'il soit nécessaire d'en fournir des exemples, que le droit de siéger aux Conciles, soit œcuméniques, soit provinciaux, et le droit d'y décider les affaires ecclésiastiques, n'appartiennent qu'aux évêques, comme chefs des Églises particulières, et que les prêtres, qui dépendent en tout de leurs archipasteurs locaux, ne peuvent être admis aux Conciles qu'avec leur assentiment, et cela seulement comme leurs conseillers, aides, ou fondés de pouvoir, et n'y peuvent tenir que les secondes places.'—Macaire's Théologie dogmat. orthodoxe, trad. par un Russe, tom. ii. § 175. Centre de l'autorité ecclésiastique, pp. 268, 270.

This was written in Russia, by a Russian prelate, and from the Orthodox point of view !

himself, neither by reproaches, nor by a publication of the injury, how true soever, or by engaging great and powerful persons, either spiritual or temporal, to chide and reprove him, least of all shall he presume to excommunicate the bishop his adversary, but represent the damage he has sustained in an indictment against him to the Spiritual College, and there sue for justice' (part ii. 'Of the Bishops,' 'Of the Visitation,' § 13, Consett, p. 58). Before the Synod are equally allowed the clergy and faithful, all over Russia, to bring their complaints against their bishop. 'Consequently,' so continues the 'Spiritual Regulation,' 'every archimandrite, hegoumen, steward, parish priest, also deacons and the inferior clergy, are free to sue their bishop in the Spiritual College, if they have suffered any great injustice by him. And if a man is not satisfied with the judgment of his bishop, he is at liberty to make an appeal, i.e. to refer the affair to the judgment of the Spiritual College; and a bishop is obliged to allow this privilege to all such petitioners and inquisitors against himself, and not to restrain or threaten them, nor, when they are gone to the Spiritual College, seal up or gut their houses.'<sup>1</sup>

In this abstract of the 'Spiritual Regulation' it is said that the Bishops are subject to the Holy Synod as to the 'supreme power.' Alas! the Synod is indeed the supreme power to be appealed to whenever bishops are striving to obtain justice and the settlement of their disputes, the Tsar thus not taking the trouble of receiving their appeals; but it is far from being supreme whenever it is a question of submission to the will of the Tsar. The obedience the Russian bishops are bound to show to the Synod, though of prodigious extent, yet has a limit prescribed to it; it is when the Synod's prescriptions possibly might not agree with the will of the Tsar. However improbable such a case might be, it could not fail to be contemplated; and so it has been. The document which affords this new evidence of the slavery of the Russian Orthodox Church is the formula of the oath taken by the Russian bishops before their consecration; what we shall quote from it will at once confirm all that we have hitherto advanced. The whole rite now followed on the election and consecration of the bishops of Russia, is detailed in a special book, which first appeared in St. Petersburg in the year 1725,<sup>1</sup> and has since been invariably reprinted without modifications. Though unsuccessful in getting the Slavonic original of that book, we have been so fortunate as to meet with three different translations of it—one Latin, another German, and the third English. The Latin translation is to be found in Haigold's already quoted 'Beilagen zum neueränderten Russland,' Riga, 1769–70 (tom i. p. 97), and bears the title of 'Ritus circa electionem et inaugurationem Episcoporum et Archiepiscoporum in Russia observari soliti. Secundum exemplar an. 1725 Petropoli typis expressum latine convertit Cyriacus Kondratowicz Academiae Scientiarum Interpres.' A German translation was given very recently by Rajewski, chaplain to the Russian Embassy in Vienna, in his 'Euchologion der orthodoxen katholischen Kirche' (Wien, 1861. II. Theil). Finally, the English translation is to be found in King's work, 'The Rites and Ceremonies of the Greek Church in Russia' (p. 289 et seq.). From this we quote the following abstracts out of the formula of the oath taken by the Bishops:—'I do promise . . . to yield true obedience all the days of my life to the Holy Legislative (?) Synod of all the Russias, as instituted by the pious Emperor Peter the Great, of immortal memory, and confirmed by command of her<sup>1</sup> present Imperial Majesty<sup>2</sup> (p. 295). . . 'To comprehend all in a few words, I do hereby bind myself, and hold myself bound by this promise, that I will faithfully observe and do all things commanded by the laws of the Most Holy Legislative (?) Synod of all the Russias, and which are written in the diploma of the Synod; which will be given me concerning the ministry committed unto me. I will also obey all other rules and statutes which shall hereafter be made by the authority of the Holy Synod, agreeably to the will of Her Imperial Majesty, and I will willingly exert my utmost diligence to execute whatever I am commanded with all obedience, always regarding truth and justice alone'<sup>3</sup> (p. 298). . . 'I also swear by the all-seeing God, that I do not understand these promises in my mind in any other sense than that in which I pronounce them with my mouth, and in the sense these words are written, and import to all who read them and hear them' (p. 299). Accordingly, whilst swearing obedience to the prescriptions of the Holy Synod, the Russian bishops mention the reason why they do so—in other words, the motive of their obedience. They obey the Synod as the legitimate<sup>4</sup> authority appointed by Peter <sup>1</sup> Catherine I. who was then Empress of Russia. We need hardly remark that whatever we state of the authority of the Tsar over the Russian Church, ought also to be applied to any woman who happens to be Empress of Russia.

<sup>1</sup> Spir. Reg. § 14, Cons. p. 59. See also Spir. Reg. part iii. § 8, p. 107. Полн. Собр. Зак. том. vi. Дух. Регл. (3718) pp. 329-330, §§ 13, 14, and p. 344, § 8.

<sup>1</sup> Чинъ избранія и рукоположенія Архіерейскаго, Спб. 1725.

<sup>2</sup> 'Promitto...omnibus diebus vitæ meæ obediendo morem gesturum semper Sanctæ dirigenti totius Russiæ Synodo, uti legitimæ potestati, a pie defuncto et æterna memoria digno PETRO M. constitutæ, et a feliciter imperante Imperatoria Majestate cum bono jussu confirmatæ.'—Haigold, i. p. 107.

<sup>3</sup> 'Obediam quoque reliquis mandatis et statutis, quæ deinceps adstipulatione illius Sanctissimæ Synodi ad libitum Imperatoriæ Majestatis constituentur.'—Haigold, p. 114.

<sup>4</sup> The word legitimate, omitted by King, stands in the Latin, (see note 2 here above), and in the German, 'als der gesetzmässigen Gewalt.'—Rajewski, ii. p. 91.

the Great, and confirmed by the present Sovereign of Russia. Consequently, far from deriving the legitimacy of the Holy Synod from its recognition by the Oriental Patriarchs, not only is such a recognition not even alluded to, but it is rather positively hinted that, in case the Sovereign of Russia for the time being should refuse to give the Synod his (or her) confirmation, they would not consider themselves bound by the oath of obedience they are just about to pronounce. Moreover, the obedience they promise to the Synod's prescriptions is on the condition that these should be agreeable to the will of his (or her) Imperial Majesty. Ought we, after this, to be taxed with exaggeration if we state that, by the very words of their oath, the Russian bishops are compelled to acknowledge the Sovereign as the source of the Synod's ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and his (or her) will as the test, both of the legitimacy of the Synod and of the moral obligation of its prescriptions?

Let us now examine what we have deservedly termed the prodigious extent of the Russian bishops' submission to the Synod. Every Russian bishop has, very naturally, his own court or tribunal for the current business and administration of his particular eparchie, or diocese. Such tribunals are known under the name of 'Ecclesiastical Consistories,' and their attributions are carefully defined in the so-called 'Statute of the Ecclesiastical Consistories' (Ustav Duchovnykh Konsistorii) of March 27th, 1841, which, together with the 'Book of the Canons,' (Kniga pravil. See above, p. 57), and the 'Spiritual Regulation,' (Duchovnyi Reglament) forms the 'Corpus juris canonici' of the Russian Orthodox Church.<sup>1</sup> As the first three articles of the 'Ustav Duchovnykh Konsistorii' clearly exhibit the mechanism of the Russian Orthodox Church's administration, we quote them here:—

<sup>1</sup> 'Источниками для познания нынѣ дѣйствующихъ въ Россіи церковныхъ законовъ служатъ 1) Книга правилъ . . 2) Духовный Регламентъ . . . 3) Уставъ Духовныхъ Консистерій, 1841 года' (Mikhailoff, op. cit. p. 37.

1. The Ecclesiastical Consistory is the tribunal by which are carried on, under the immediate presidency of the bishop of the eparchie (diocese), the administration and ecclesiastical jurisdiction in every special portion of the Russian Orthodox Church, called an Eparchie. 2. The Consistory, together with the bishop of the eparchie, are under the jurisdiction of the Holy Synod, as the governing Council (pravitel'stviustchii Sobor) of the Russian Church. From the Synod alone they receive decrees; and besides the Synod and the bishop of the eparchie, there exists no other tribunal or authority entitled directly to meddle with the affairs of the eparchie, or to stop any decisions or arrangements appertaining to the sphere of action of the ecclesiastical jurisdiction. 3. Since, according to the 35th canon of the Apostles, the jurisdiction of every bishop is not extended beyond the limits of the eparchie entrusted to him, the jurisdiction of the Consistory must equally be confined within the same limits.'<sup>1</sup>

Now, from the same 'Ustav' are quoted the following prescriptions concerning the Russian bishops' relations to the Synod.—The members composing the Consistory are presented by the bishop, but confirmed by the Synod, and they are equally dismissed in the same way (Art. 282). They cannot be absent for more than twenty-eight days without the permission of the Synod (Art. 285). In case of special emergency, the Synod is empowered to appoint, besides the permanent, a temporary Consistory, by the addition of three or four new members (281). The right of appeal from the tribunal of the bishop to that of the Synod is stated in several articles (177, 181, 185). The strictest control is constantly exercised by the Synod, through the Consistory, in what concerns the administration of ecclesiastical property (348-349).

<sup>1</sup> Полн. Собр. 2nd series, tom. xvi. Царствов. Николая i. March 27, 1841 (14,409). Высочайше утвержденный Уставъ Духовныхъ Консисторій, pp. 221–222.

Moreover, to the Consistory is reserved the faculty of interfering in the administration of the Episcopal house, in the way stated in Article 112, where are equally indicated the cases in which they are bound to inform the Synod. Special reports are also to be sent to the Synod, concerning the property and administration of the Churches (145, 38 note), and monasteries (129, 131, 132, 38 note). Without the permission of the Holy Synod, the bishop is not allowed to build any new church or chapel, either in the towns (46), or in the cemeteries belonging to the towns (46), or in the monasteries (48), or, finally, in private houses (49). As to the latter, if they are to be built in the two capitals of St. Petersburg and Moscow, His Majesty's permission is required (49). The Synod's permission is equally required for building oratories (47) and ordering the suppression of parish churches (61). Without the Synod's permission, no one is allowed to take the religious vows (81). Without the same permission no one, having been brought up in ecclesiastical academies or seminaries, is permitted to quit the ecclesiastical state (92). The same rule prevails with regard to any enrolled among the secular or regular clergy, who desire to enter into the secular state (91), or who are condemned to be deprived of the ecclesiastical dignity (181). No bishop is allowed to go to St. Petersburg without the Synod's consent, and a passport delivered by the Synod (88). The bishop ought to inform the Synod if any doctrine is being disseminated contrary to the teaching of the Orthodox Church (7); if any superstition is being practised or spread among the people (19); if Orthodox Russians attach themselves to any sect of the Raskol (21, 24).<sup>1</sup> In the last case, besides informing the Synod, the bishop must proceed against them according to the laws, by means of the civil authorities (21, 24). The same rule prevails in case of anybody greatly disturbing the divine service in the churches (36). Considerable abuses in the sale of wax tapers are equally to be referred to the Synod (147).

As to marriages, if any sentence is passed by the Consistory annulling a marriage, because of its being contracted by force or fraud, such sentence must be confirmed by the Holy Synod (218). This is equally the case for marriages declared illegitimate, because contracted by persons within the prohibited degrees of consanguinity and affinity, or of spiritual affinity (220-1). To the Synod must be referred the case of a marriage contracted during the life of the consort (223), and its confirmation is required for every sentence of dissolution, in consequence of the demand of the consorts (238, 259), as well as for the faculty of contracting a new marriage, in case of the consort's disappearance, after the term of five years (237).<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> By that collective name (расколъ, schisme) are designated the numerous sects of Dissenters in the very bosom of the Russian Orthodox Church. The origin of the Russian sects dates from the correction of the liturgical books by the great patriarch Nikon (1660). Ignorant people believed that this correction was an attempt to alter the doctrine of their Church. At the present day, in spite of two centuries of persecutions such as can hardly be found elsewhere, the Russian Raskolniks are in number about nine millions, and the Russian Government has already entered on the path of concessions to them. A collection of official documents concerning the Raskol was published in London by V. Kelsieff, under the title of Сборникъ правительственныхъ свѣдѣній о Раскольникахъ, составленный В. Кельсиевымъ, 1860-62. See also 'Le Raskol; essai historique et critique sur les sectes religieuses en Russie' by a Russian (Paris and Strasburg, 1859).—Schedo Ferroti, Études sur l'Avenir de la Russie. La Tolérance et le Schisme religieux (Berlin, 1858).—Eckardt, Modern Russia (London, 1870), &c.

On the Russian Dissenters greatly depends the future of the Russian Orthodox Church.

Every bishop is bound, moreover, to send to the Synod full reports as to the state of the eparchie, under severe penalties in case he should dare to conceal any great disorder whatever (Spir. Reg. 'Of the Bishops,' Consett, p. 59). Special reports are to be made every year to the Synod, concerning the schools (14), the number of confessions and communions (16), the number of converts from the raskol (22 note) or other Christian societies (25), and from Judaism, Mahometanism, or Paganism (31); the furniture of the churches (38); the students who, having finished their course of studies in any ecclesiastical institution, are still without employment (78). An accurate description of the state of the clergy, both secular and regular is also required (96), besides a special report concerning the superiors of monasteries and the chief dignitaries of the secular clergy of the eparchie (97). The bishop is equally to inform the Synod of those, among his clergy, whom he deems worthy of any of the rewards or decorations appointed by the Government for ecclesiastical persons (98). A special account is to be sent three times every year to the Synod, concerning the donations exceeding 100 roubles which happen to be made to the churches or the clergy (142). The amount of money collected every year in the churches is equally to be made known to the Synod (146). In case the sum allowed by the Government for buildings of ecclesiastical purposes exceed what is really required, the excess ought to be returned to the Government, and not employed in any use whatever without the consent of the Holy Synod (156). Every year the bishop is also to send to the Synod a report of the number of births, marriages, and deaths (109).

<sup>1</sup> The faculty of contracting a new marriage, even during the life of the consort, is granted, according to the Russian legislation, 1, in case of adultery on the part of the consort; 2, in case of the consort having been condemned to the privation of all civil rights (civil death); 3, in case of disappearance, if after five years no news can be obtained of him.

Finally, . . . ‘As to the course of business’ (so reads the 343rd article), ‘the bishops ought to send to the Most Holy Synod the following reports—1. Every month: (a)—of His Majesty’s orders which have not yet been executed; (β) of the decrees received from the Holy Synod; <sup>1</sup> (γ) of those of these last which have not yet been put into execution. 2. Every year: of the affairs not yet resolved in the Consistory, or still waiting their execution through the Chancery, with special personal remarks.’ <sup>2</sup>

Such are the principal regulations concerning the Russian bishops’ dependence on the Synod. In looking at them one cannot help thinking of the Catholic bishops’ dependence on the Pope, and a comparison forcibly occurs to the mind as to the legitimacy and extent of the Synod’s jurisdiction over its bishops and of the Pope’s jurisdiction over the Catholic bishops of the whole world. Whilst a Catholic bishop, in the ordinary daily emergencies of the administration of his diocese, has scarcely occasion even to perceive the existence of that authority which yet he believes entrusted by God with the power of full and ordinary jurisdiction over the <sup>1</sup> Two kinds of orders are here mentioned as notified to the Bishops in the course of the year. Some of them are directly issued by the Tsar, whilst others are communicated to the bishops in the form of Synodical decrees. The ПОЛН. СОБР. ЗАК. offers many instances of that double kind of orders, just as in civil matters it offers instances of ukases directly emanating from the Tsar, and others issued in the form of decrees of the Senate.

We need hardly remind our readers that no law whatever may be issued in Russia, either by the Senate or by the Synod, without the previous consent of the Tsar.—See what we have said above of the legislative power in the Russian Church, pp. 53–56.

<sup>2</sup> ПОЛН. СОБР. ЗАК. 2nd series, tom. xvi. Уст. Дух. Конс. p. 260.

whole Catholic Church, a Russian bishop, who professes to believe himself to be, not abusively but in all points and properly, CHIEF and HEAD of his particular Church,<sup>1</sup> meets at every step with the interference of the Synod, whose minute and vexatious control is exercised to such an extent that we can hardly conceive how the Russian bishops can even be termed 'CHIEFS and HEADS in the Church.'

Yet the just quoted prescriptions are far from representing in its real extent the enslavement of the Russian bishops. In order to appreciate it according to the truth we must pay attention to the office and attributions of a LAYMAN constantly attached to the Consistory or court of every Bishop, and called Secretary of the Ecclesiastical Consistory. The Secretary of the Consistory is appointed on the presentation of the Holy Synod by its Chief Procurator (another layman). (Ust. Duch. Kons. art. 287). Under the presidency of the Secretary is the Chancery for expediting the affairs of the Consistory according to the prescriptions of the Government (286). Like the bishop of the eparchie, the Secretary is placed under the immediate jurisdiction of the Chief Procurator of the Holy Synod, and is bound to execute all his orders (288). Upon the Secretary rests, beside the immediate inspection of the Chancery in every department, the responsibility as to the legality of procedure in the conduct of affairs (299). In the sittings of the Consistory, the business is brought before it either immediately through the Secretary, or through another official, under his direction (310). In case a decision be taken which he deems contrary to the laws, it is his office to remind the Consistory of the law which is transgressed (318), and if his remarks are not listened to, he is to mention the fact both in the journal and protocol of the Consistory, and, further, to present to the Bishop a report of the matter with the exposition of the reasons urged by him in the sitting against the decision (329). The journal of the sittings is drawn up under his inspection, and is, like the protocols of the Consistory, countersigned by him (325, and tables xvi. xvii.). Special reports concerning the affairs treated in the Consistory are to be presented by him to the Chief Procurator of the Synod, besides those which are sent by the Bishops (344). He it is who overlooks the archivist of the Consistory in the exact discharge of his duties (357); he it is who takes care that, for expenses ordered by the Consistory, the money should be disbursed exactly and in just time (349); finally, in order, it might appear, to guarantee the Russian Church from the danger of embezzlement on the side of her bishops, and to protect these against any such temptations, he it is, again, who keeps the key of the chest out of which the expenses are to be paid (349).—‘The HOLY GHOST has appointed to the particular Churches, which truly are Churches and members of the universal one, the bishops as GOVERNORS and PASTORS, and not abusively, but in all points and properly CHIEFS and HEADS!’<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Dosithei Confessio, Decr. x. See above, p. 11.

The first statements we undertook to prove are now sufficiently justified. The State Church of Russia is totally deprived of any self-government; her real chief administrator and legislator is the Tsar. The Synod, as a mere organ (organ) or instrument (orudie) in the hands of the Tsar, and the Russian bishops cannot possibly be called with truth Chiefs of the Church.

All this, however, is not the worst. Were the slavery of the Russian Church a mere transitory fact, an abuse of power against which the Russian Church, though enduring it, would have protested, we should not have undertaken to make it known to the world. But, alas! her slavery is not a mere transitory fact; it is grounded upon theories and principles which the Russian Orthodox Church presents us as her own; it is the immediate and necessary application of tenets accepted and sanctioned by her—a kind of dogma of her own. Nay, the Russian Orthodox Church seems to be no longer aware of the Saviour's words: 'Date ergo quæ sunt Cæsaris Cæsari et quæ sunt Dei Deo.' Nothing is more afflicting, and at the same time instructive, than the confusion and misconceptions which pervade her dogmatical teaching whenever the question is one of the government of the Church. The total distinction between the civil and ecclesiastical powers, each of them being supreme in its own sphere,<sup>1</sup> is almost denied by her; at any rate the independence of the ecclesiastical power seems to be confined to the teaching of the already defined articles of faith, as if by 'govern the Church' must be understood only 'teach the Church.' But let us allege evidence of what we have just advanced. Here also we need only interrogate the most authentic documents of the Russian Orthodox Church, her 'Spiritual Regulation,'<sup>1</sup> the ukases of her Tsars, and the principles laid down in her own 'catechisms.'

<sup>1</sup> Kimmel, Monum. fidei Eccl. orient. Dosithei Confessio. Decr. x. p. 436. (See above, p. 11.)

<sup>1</sup> ' . . . Civilis potestas summa quidem in suo genere est, nimirum in rebus civilibus; sed non inde efficitur, ut summa etiam esse debeat in rebus sacris quarum dissimile genus est. In eo summa est potestas ecclesiastica; et vero utraque suas habet partes, et suum certum, ac definitum genus in quo summa est. Hæc (ecclesiastica) nimirum curat res sacras atque divinas, illa (civilis) studet civium commodis, civilemque societatem administrat. Nulla hic pugna, aut absurdum, rerumque confusio, neque status in statu est, quod inquirunt Protestantes; sed status uterque diversi generis est, et habet uterque provinciam suam, cujus intra fines continere sese debet. Atque in eo quidem omnis est posita vera atque accurata distinctio Ecclesiasticæ atque Civilis potestatis, quod hæc est ordinis naturalis, illa supernaturalis, altera in res civiles, atque in temporalem hominum felicitatem incumbit, altera præest rebus sacris atque divinis et curam gerit eorum, quæ ad æternam beatitudinem pertinent.' Devoti. (Jo. Arch. Carthag.) Jus Canonicum Universum publicum et privatum. Nova romana editio accuratior (Romæ, 1837). Proleg. c. viii. § ix.

Out of the 'Spiritual Regulation' we shall quote only the chief reason alleged in its first part (together with others of no greater weight<sup>2</sup>) for the abolition of the patriarchate and the establishment of the Synod. 'The ignorant vulgar people do not consider how far the spiritual power is removed from (raznstvuiet) the regal, but, in admiration of the splendour and dignity of a high priest, consider such a ruler as a second sovereign, equal in power to the king himself or above him, and imagine the spiritual order to be another and better sovereignty.'<sup>3</sup> If these words need any explanation, this is afforded by that saying of Peter related by Voltaire: 'Il pensait et disait publiquement que l'idée des deux puissances fondée sur l'allégorie des deux épées qui se trouvèrent chez les Apôtres était une idée absurde.'<sup>4</sup> Again, in his nominal ukase, 'On monastic vocation,' in which, according to Voltaire, Peter shows himself both a minister of State

<sup>1</sup> The Spiritual Regulation has been, since Peter the Great, accepted upon oath by every bishop in Russia, and its explanation is enforced in the ecclesiastical schools of the Russian Empire.

<sup>2</sup> It is worthy of remark, that, of all the 'weighty reasons' alleged by Peter the Great in Part I. of the Spiritual Regulation, in order to persuade his subjects of the convenience, utility, and necessity of the establishment of the Synod, that here quoted is, we may say, the only one which has not been disregarded and refuted by the conduct of the subsequent Tsars, successors of Peter. Those reasons which concern the advantages to be found in a Council of rulers, rather than in one single ruler, were refuted by the abolition of the Colleges and the establishment of the Ministries (see above, p. 51). That, concerning the novitiate or apprenticeship to be had in the Synod for future bishops of Russia was refuted by the fact of the admission at the present day into the Synod of bishops alone, with only two dignitaries of the secular clergy. (See above, pp. 17-20.)

<sup>3</sup> Spir. Reg. part i. § 7. Consett, pp. 18, 19. Полн. Собр. Зак. том. vi. Дух. Регл. pp. 317, 318.

<sup>4</sup> Histoire de l'Empire de Russie sous Pierre le Grand, part ii. chap. xiv.

and a Father of the Church, the Russian autocrat gives the reason why, in the 'Spiritual Regulation,' the matter concerning the monks had not been thoroughly enough explained. The reason is because 'the greatest necessity then requiring amendment, was created by the authority of the chief prelate, which some people strove to exaggerate as being supreme, like that of the Pope of Rome, against the commandment of God.'<sup>1</sup> The reader being now more than sufficiently acquainted with Peter's opinions in ecclesiastical matters, we may proceed to deal with his successors.

About forty years after the establishment of the Synod, Catherine II., though a woman, reiterated confidently the same principles, as a blessed inheritance of her great predecessor Peter the Great. In her celebrated ukase of the 12th of August, 1762, about the possessions of the clergy, after referring to the maternal authority she possessed for the welfare of the people, Catherine complains that the Russian clergy had often made bad use of their properties, so that 'many of our predecessors (she says), invested as they were by God, like all monarchs, WITH THE SUPREME AUTHORITY IN THE CHURCH,<sup>2</sup> were obliged to prescribe them rules, etc.' Then, after having ordered that a large portion of the present possessions of the clergy should be taken from them, Catherine excuses herself for doing so by the following declaration: 'It is neither our intention nor our desire to appropriate to ourselves the possessions of the Church, but we only exercise the authority, given to us by God, to prescribe laws for the best use of them, according to the glory of God and the welfare of the country.'<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> . . . тогда еще и о всемъ ко исправленію была нужда, но важная была о верховной Архіерейской власти, которую примѣромъ Папы Римскаго, противно повелѣнія Божія, распространять нѣкоторые тщились. — Полн. Собр. Зак. tom. vii. (4450), Jan. 31, 1724, О званіи монашескомъ, p. 227.

<sup>2</sup> Имѣя порученную себѣ отъ Бога такъ какъ и всѣ Монархи, въ Церкви главную власть. . . (Полн. Собр. tom. xvi. (11,643), August 12, 1762, p. 51.

Such was, in the year 1762, the language of an Empress of Russia. It would have been astonishing after that, if when the Russian sovereigns acted and spoke so much like heads of the Church, the mere expression of HEAD OF THE CHURCH in reference to the Tsar had long been wanting in the official acts of the Russian empire. What could not fail to happen we meet with a little before the end of the last century in the most solemn and most important act issued by any Tsar since Peter the Great, we mean the 'Act of Succession to the throne of Russia,' promulgated by Paul I. (1797). This document has doubtless been translated into many languages, and everyone will find in it as follows: 'If the hereditary succession should devolve to a female line, to some woman who is already governing on another throne, then she is obliged to elect which faith and throne she is willing to retain, and to renounce the other for herself and her successors; if, namely, the possession of that throne be linked to some particular faith; and this because the sovereigns of Russia are HEADS OF THE CHURCH.'<sup>2</sup>

Now it is well worthy of remark that the expression 'head of the Church' (glava tserkvi) applied in a general way to men, occurs, if we are not wrong, only twice in the whole Russian Orthodox literature. Once it is applied to the Tsar, and this in Paul I.'s 'Act of Succession;' another time it is applied to a ROMAN PONTIFF, to the Pope Leo the Great, and this in the office of the saint, on

<sup>1</sup> Ibid. p. 52.

<sup>2</sup> . . . Для того что Государи Россійскіе суть Главою церкви. (Полн. Собр. Зак. том. xxiv. (17,910), April 5, 1797, p. 588.

February 18, on which day the Russian Orthodox Church thus addresses Saint Leo :—

'What must we call thee, O man inspired by God!
Head of Christ's Orthodox Church? or eye of piety?'<sup>1</sup>

This fact may afford a striking testimony to the ancient belief of the Oriental Orthodox Church in the supreme power of jurisdiction of Peter's successors over the Universal Church; <sup>2</sup> such, at any rate, will undeniably be the case if we are only allowed to understand the expression of 'head of the Church' (glava tserkvi) when applied to St. Leo, in the very sense in which the same expression was understood by Paul I. when applied by him to himself and to any of the Tsars his successors. In fact the year following the publication of the 'Act of Succession,' Paul I. published a 'Regulation for the Churches and Monasteries of the Roman Catholic Belief in the Russian Empire.' This regulation begins as follows:—'1. The supreme authority given by God to the Autocrat, and his paternal solicitude for the welfare of the people entrusted to him from above, is equally extended over the ecclesiastical order; hence it is that they must observe towards the Tsar, as towards the chief chosen by God himself, the most devoted fidelity, and show to him, in all religious and civil matters, the due obedience.'<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Что ты именуемъ, богодохновенне? Главу ли православныя Церкви Христовой, око ли благочестья? (Мин. мѣсяч. Февр. 18. Св. Льва папы римск. На Веч.

<sup>2</sup> In the same office St. Leo is called 'successor of the venerable Peter.' Петра честнаго преемникъ. (На Утр. пѣснь. 6.

<sup>3</sup> Верховная власть дарованная Самодержцу отъ Бога, и Отеческое попеченіе о благоденствіи ввѣренныхъ свыше ему народовъ, распространяется равно и на Духовенство; по чему оно и повинно хранить къ своему Государю, яко

2. Like the white, the black clergy also are obliged to carry out with the greatest exactness all legitimate injunctions and commands of the authority established over them. In case of any dissatisfaction with them, they ought to bring their complaint before the bishop of their eparchie (diocese), and in case this should not afford them the legitimate satisfaction, they are permitted to refer the case to the Roman Catholic Department of the College of Justice.’<sup>1</sup>

What do these words mean, we confidently ask our readers, but that every Russian Tsar is pope in his own states? The well-known words of the Pope St. Leo—‘In the person of my humility let him (St. Peter) be recognised and honoured, with whom still abides the care of all the pastors and the guardianship of the flock entrusted to him, and whose dignity does not fail in the unworthy successor’<sup>2</sup>—do not express the doctrine of a visible head of the Church, in reference to the whole world, either so plainly or so unambiguously as Paul I.’s ukase does with regard to the Church of the Russian Empire; and the more so if we consider that they were his Catholic subjects who were concerned in it. Let us also, as we insist, only be allowed to explain the liturgical expression ‘HEAD OF THE CHURCH’ (glava tserkvi), applied to the Pope St. Leo, in the same sense in which Paul I. called himself ‘head of the Church,’ and Russia’s ancient belief in the supremacy

самимъ Богомъ избранному Начальнику, всеподданническую вѣрность и оказывать во всѣхъ духовныхъ и мірскихъ дѣлахъ достоодложное послушаніе.

Полн. Собр. Зак. том. xxv. (18,734), p. 436. November 3, 1798.

<sup>1</sup> Ibid.

<sup>2</sup> Sermo 2dus in anniversario assumptionis suæ. ‘In persona humilitatis meæ ille intelligatur, ille honoretur in quo et omnium pastorum sollicitudo, cum commendatarum sibi ovium custodia perseverat, et cujus etiam dignitas in indigno hærede non deficit.’

of Peter's successors will be undeniably proved by her liturgy itself.

The quoted abstracts of the Russian Tsars' ukases are amply sufficient, we believe, for the purpose of evincing the fact that the enslavement of the Russian Orthodox Church was considered by them as the exercise of a legitimate right. As to the Russian Church herself, her silence in presence of their pretensions, and her condescension and wonderful obedience in everything concerning her government, entitle us to consider that Church as fully conniving at her masters' will and adhering to the doctrine professed by them. Numerous and no less striking instances of the Tsars speaking of and considering themselves as real rulers of the Russian Orthodox Church are equally supplied by the ukases of Paul I.'s successors down to the present Emperor of Russia, especially by those of Nicholas, to whom the Russian Church is indebted for the 'Ustav duchovnykh Konsistorii,' which our readers already know. For brevity's sake, however, we refer them for further instances to the 'Collection of Russian Laws,' or to Theiner's celebrated works, 'Die Staatskirche Russlands' and 'Die neuesten Zustände der katholischen Kirche beider Ritus in Poland und Russland,' or to the French work, 'Persécutions et souffrances de l'Église catholique en Russie,' &c.

Passing on now to the Russian Catechisms, we will abstain from making any choice of our own, but will be guided by the Russians themselves. Let us interrogate them and listen to them. We find in the 'Théologie dogmatique orthodoxe de Mgr. Macaire, traduite par un Russe' (Introd. p. 79), that 'Parmi les abrégés ou précis de la foi, les plus remarquables en langue russe sont: 1°. Le Catéchisme de l'éminentissime Théophane Prokopovich, qui fut longtemps en usage dans les écoles. 2°. Les Catéchismes (le petit et le grand) de l'éminentissime Platon, métropolitain de Moscou, qui eurent la même destination. 3°. Les Catéchismes, et surtout le grand, de l'éminentissime Philarète, métropolitain de Moscou, qui se publie de nos jours, soit pour l'enseignement scolaire, soit à l'usage de tous les chrétiens orthodoxes.'—We are told the same by Mgr. Filaret, Archbishop of Tchernigoff, in his 'History of the Russian Church.' 'Theophane Prokopovich,' so says that prelate, 'wrote a Catechism and a Primer, with the explanation of the commandments of God, which long enough deserved to be approved for general use. After that a catechism for children, the best for its epoch, was written by the Metropolitan Plato; then another, more profound and exact (1st ed. 1823), was written by the Metropolitan Filaret.'<sup>1</sup>—Accordingly we shall examine what doctrine is contained in these three catechisms, respecting the government of the Church.

The first of the three is that commonly known as the Catechism of Peter the Great.<sup>2</sup> In fact, the Russian Tsar was too clear-sighted not to understand that the best support for his ecclesiastical reformation would be a religious one. He therefore caused his ideas to be reduced to some practical maxims, adapted to the most vulgar intelligence, to form part of the religious teaching of the people. The man charged by him to draw up a little catechism for the purpose, was Theophane Prokopovich, the same to whom we owe the 'Spiritual Regulation.' Peter's Catechism appeared in

<sup>1</sup> Filaret: Истор. Русс. Церк. пер. v. § 14, p. 47.

Prokopovich's Catechism and Primer bear in Russian the title of Букварь, или первое учение отрокомъ, съ катихизисомъ (1720). See Eugeny, Metr. of Kieff. Словарь историческій о бывшихъ въ Россіи писателяхъ духовнаго чина греко-россійской церкви. Спб. 1827. ii. p. 304.

<sup>2</sup> See Kimmel's Monum. fidei Eccl. orient. Proleg. lix. and lxxiii.

St. Petersburg a little before the establishment of the Holy Synod, viz., in the year 1720. The German translation appeared in 1724 (very likely at Dantzic), and the English one was published before the German in London by Philipps, in the year 1723, under the title of 'The Russian Catechism.'<sup>1</sup>

Before quoting the passages concerning the government of the Church, we beg to call the attention of our readers to the following judgment of an Evangelico-Lutheran writer, J. W. Feuerlein. In his 'Biblioth. Symbol. Evangelico-lutherana' (Gottingæ, 1752), at the place where he is quoting the German translation of Peter's 'Catechism' and the 'Spiritual Regulation,' he says: 'It is chiefly out of these two sources that W. Fried. Lutjens, in his dissertation "De religione Ruthenorum hodierna" (Gottingæ, 1745), showed that the religion of the Great Peter has come very near to our own, so that the only thing to be desired is its more general reception among the Russian clergy and people.'<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> The German translation bears the following title: 'Erste Unterweisung der Jugend, enthaltend ein A B C-Büchlein, wie auch eine kurze Erklärung der zehen Gebote, des Gebets des Herrn und des Glaubens-Bekenntnisses, auf Befehl Petri M., Imperatoris von gantz Russland, in den Druck gegeben.'

The English translation is mentioned by Eugeny in his Словарь, etc., ii. p. 304; yet there is given by mistake the date of 1725. An error of statement is also to be found in Philipps' preface to the English translation, as to the author of that catechism. The Rev. R. W. Blackmore, in the preface to his Doctrine of the Russian Church (Aberdeen, 1845), mentions Prokopovich's Catechism and its English translation, and states that this reached a second edition.

<sup>2</sup> 'Ex his in primis scriptis, diss. hist. theol. de religione Ruthenorum hodierna me præside a Resp. auctore Guil. Fred. Lutjens A.D. 1745, edita et publice defensa ostendit, Religionem Magni Petri ad nostram quam proxime accessisse ut tantum magis universalis ejus receptio apud clerum et populum Ruthenicum optanda sit.' Feuerlinius, Bibl. etc., App. ii. sect. iii. § 184, p. 354. See also on that subject, Kimmel, Monum. etc., proleg. lix. lx. F. Gagarin, S. J. De l'enseignement de la Théologie dans l'Église russe, in the Études de Théologie, etc. (Paris, 1857.)

Let us now see the explanation of the fifth commandment, as it is contained in the Catechism of Peter. We quote Philipps' translation, as we were not able to get the original Russian.

‘Q. What is required in the fifth<sup>1</sup> commandment?’

‘A. It is required of us to honour and respect, not only our natural parents, but those that are in dignity and place of parents, and have any degree of authority over us.

‘Q. Who are those that can justly demand this respect

Moreover, the following prescription concerning preachers gives evidence of Peter's religious tendencies. Spir. Reg. part ii. No. xxiii. Consett, p. 86.

‘That none presume to preach unless he has been educated in an Academy, and has a testimonial from the Spiritual College. But if anyone has been educated by men of another religion, let him present himself first to the Spiritual College, to be there examined, what knowledge he has in the Holy Scripture, and to make a discourse on any subject which the College shall give him to discourse upon, and if he is found to be a good scholar, to give him a testimonial and licence to preach, if he is disposed to go into Holy Orders.’ ПОЛН. СОБР. том. vi. ДѢЯ. ПЕР. (3718) p. 331.

<sup>1</sup> The Oriental Orthodox Church follows, in the division of the Ten Commandments, the arrangement commonly adopted also by Protestants. The ‘Catechism of the Council of Trent’ mentions it, giving at the same time the reason why the other arrangement has been preferred.

‘THOU SHALT NOT MAKE (so runs the said Catechism, quoting Exodus xx. 4),—THOU SHALT NOT MAKE TO THYSELF A GRAVEN THING, NOR THE LIKENESS OF ANYTHING THAT IS IN HEAVEN ABOVE, OR IN THE EARTH BENEATH, NOR OF THOSE THINGS THAT ARE IN THE WATERS UNDER THE EARTH: THOU SHALT NOT ADORE THEM NOR SERVE THEM. Some (continues the same Catechism), supposing these words to constitute a distinct precept, reduce the ninth and tenth commandments into one. St. Augustine (sup. Exod. quest. 71, and in Ps. xxxii. Serm. 2) holds a different opinion; considering the two last to be distinct, he refers these words to the first commandment; and this division, because well-known (celebris) in the Church, we willingly adopt. As a very just argument in its favour, we may, however, add the propriety of annexing to the first commandment the reward or punishment attached to its observance or violation.

‘This commandment does not prohibit the arts of painting or sculpture; the Scripture informs us that God Himself commanded images of cherubim, and also the brazen serpent, to be made,’ etc.—Catechismus ex decreto Concilii Tridentini ad parochos (Romæ, 1845), cap. ii. Nos. 16, 17, p. 231.

from us, and what honour and reverence is due to them respectively?

‘A. I. In the first place kings and magistrates, who rule over us in the Lord, are to us in the place of fathers, whose duty is to defend their subjects, and seek what is best for them, both in temporals and spirituals, and therefore must have a watchful eye to all ecclesiastical, military, and civil affairs, that men do conscientiously execute their respective employments; and this is, next God, the highest fatherly dignity. . . .

‘II. Next to kings and sovereigns princes, spiritual governors, senators, judges, generals of armies, and other magistrates, are vested likewise with the fatherly dignity. The duty of ecclesiastical governors is to lead the people in the way of salvation. The civil magistrate should distribute justice without respect to persons. The general must promote military discipline, and inspire the soldiery with Christian courage. Inferiors must love and respect their superiors, pray for them, and cheerfully obey all their just commands.

‘III. The third order of men vested with fatherly authority are our natural parents, viz., fathers and mothers; for though, according to nature, they claim the first place, yet, in a civil society, the persons above mentioned, as promoters of the public good, deserve greater honour than they . . .’ etc. (pp. 10, 11).

‘Objection. I am at a loss how to behave myself when one to whom I owe filial obedience commands, and another, who likewise stands in the same degree of paternal authority, forbids me the same thing.

‘Answer. When neither of these has authority over the other, then you must have a regard to what is commanded, and not to the person that commands. For if your master, to whom you owe fidelity and service, commands you any lawful thing, and your father forbids it, obey your master and not your father. But if one is superior in dignity to the other, obey that superior person; for if thy father or thy master command thee anything that is against the order of the magistrate, obey the civil power, and not thy father or master. But if the magistrate bids thee do anything that the Czar forbids, BY ALL MEANS OBEY THE CZAR ' (p. 14).

Before making any remarks on the doctrine contained in these abstracts, we must quote also some passages of the second Catechism—that of Platon, Metropolitan of Moscow.<sup>1</sup>

This Catechism appeared for the first time in 1765, and was soon received into general use for the religious instruction of the people. There exist more than eight different translations of it, two of which are in modern Greek. The first Greek translation of 1783 is dedicated to the Metropolitan of Philadelphia, Sophronius Koutoubaly;<sup>2</sup> the second of Korai, which appeared in 1782,<sup>3</sup> was reprinted in Corcyra in 1827, and, by the editor, Constantine Typaldos, dedicated to the Orthodox clergy.<sup>4</sup> As regards English translations, we have found two; the first made from the original Russian was published in 1814 by Pinkerton;<sup>5</sup> the second, made from the Greek of Korai, appeared in 1857, and is due to G. Potessaro.<sup>6</sup> As to the orthodoxy of Platon's Catechism, the following judgment

<sup>1</sup> The Russian title is Православніе ученіе, или сокращенная Христіанская Богословія. Спб. 1765 and 1780.

<sup>2</sup> Ὁρθόδοξος διδασκαλία, ἥτοι χριστιανικὴ Θεολογία ἐν σύνψει. . . Vienna, 1783.

<sup>3</sup> Ὁρθόδοξος διδασκαλία εἴτουν σύνopsis τῆς χριστιανικῆς Θεολογίας. . . Leipzig, 1782.

<sup>4</sup> Πλάτωνος μητροπ. Μόσκας ὀρθόδοξος διδασκαλία. . . Corcyra, 1827.

<sup>5</sup> The Present State of the Greek Church in Russia, or a Summary of Christian Divinity, by Platon, late Metropolitan of Moscow, translated from the Slavonian, etc., by Robert Pinkerton (Edinburgh, 1814), 8vo.

<sup>6</sup> The Orthodox Doctrine of the Apostolic Eastern Church, or a Compendium of Christian Theology, translated from the Greek (London: Whitaker, 1857).

was quoted by Snegireff, the Russian biographer of Platon, as having been expressed by Bacmeister: 'This work forms an epoch in the history of the Church. The doctrine expressed in it is further removed from that of the Roman Catholic than from that of the Lutheran Church, and even, in many points, agrees with the latter.'<sup>1</sup>

When Platon composed his Catechism, he was preceptor to the Tsarevich Paul Petrovich, afterwards Paul I., the very Tsar who introduced in the official documents of the Russian empire the designation of 'Head of the Church' (glava tserkvi) for himself and his successors. To his imperial pupil Platon could not teach anything at variance with the principles of his glorious ancestor Peter the Great, and the Catechism being composed for the use of the Tsarevich, no one will wonder to find in it as follows:—

Part 2. xxviii. 'Of the Government of the Church.' (Translation of Pinkerton, p. 167.) ' . . . The governors of the Church consist of pastors and spiritual teachers, according to the doctrine of Paul to the Ephesians: "And he (Christ) gave some apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers, for the perfecting of the saints for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ."—Eph. iv. 11, 12.'

'Of pastors some are greater, such as bishops; the other

<sup>1</sup> Бакмейстеръ при разсмотрѣніи Пѣмецкаго перевода сего сочиненія заключаетъ, что: 'оно составляетъ эпоху для Церковной Исторіи и будто изложенное въ немъ ученіе болѣе отдѣлено отъ Римско-Католической нежели отъ Лютеранской Церкви, и даже во многомъ согласно съ послѣднею.' (Snegireff. Жизнь московск. Митроп. Платона. (Моск. 1856, tom. ii. p. 92.

The original German, too freely translated by Snegireff, reads as follows: 'Man bemerkt, dass diese (russische) Kirche weniger von der Lutherischen abweicht, und sich von der Pabstlichen mehr absondert, als man bisher, bei dem Mangel ihrer Lehrbücher, geglaubt hat,'—Bacm. Russische Bibliothek (1772), B. I. st. ii. No. xii. p. 120.

are lesser, such as presbyters or ministers. Christ alone is the head of this Church government and service, because, as He is the founder of His Church, so He is her only independent Governor, who ruleth her invisibly by His word and spirit. Consequently, in all matters RESPECTING THE ESSENCE OF FAITH, the Church can obey no one except Himself, and the evident testimony of the Word of God.'

P. 169.—'There have been seven general Councils exclusive of that of the Apostles mentioned in Acts xv. 6. 1st—of Nicæa; 2nd—of Constantinople; 3rd—of Ephesus; 4th—of Chalcedon; 5th—second of Constantinople; 6th—third of Constantinople; 7th—second of Nicæa. These Councils were usually called by pious Emperors, in which sometimes those great personages were present themselves; for orthodox monarchs are the chief guardians and protectors of the Church.<sup>1</sup> A Christian monarch is bound to strive no less for the prosperity of the Church than for the general good of the State. From him the Church of Christ demands: 1st. To know the law of God. 2nd. To have the fear of God and give a pious example. 3rd. To observe that the government of the Church be properly administered, and to encourage faithful labourers.<sup>2</sup> 4th. To quench divisions, and to protect her from oppressors and revilers. 5th. To disseminate learning and liberally to support schools. 6th. To endeavour to bring the unbelieving nations to the faith. From this everyone will see what a close connection exists betwixt civil society and the Church; because, in order that an honest citizen may rightly perform the duties of his station, it is necessary that he keep himself from evil and perform these conscientiously. But who can bind the conscience except God, the searcher of hearts and trier of the reins? And more particularly is it of peculiar advantage for a Sovereign to be under the influence of a holy faith; because he, although subject to no human laws,<sup>1</sup> is thereby made subject to the law of faith, and is thus preserved within the bounds of holy justice. Moreover, it enables him with firmness to perform his exalted duties; for, as a monarch has no person on earth higher than himself,<sup>2</sup> so he can be rewarded by none for his labours; hence faith alone can encourage a Sovereign in the discharge of his duty, while it promises him a real, worthy, and most exalted reward in heaven.' (Russ. ed. 1780, pp. 129–131.)

<sup>1</sup> Государи суть главные церкви попечители и покровители. (Правосл. учен. ed. 1780, Часть. ii. § 29. p. 130.

<sup>2</sup> Смотрѣть чтобъ правительство церковное было порядочно, и вѣрно труждающихся одобрять. Ibid.

III. Part 9, p. 245. 'The fifth commandment requires that we should render to our parents, and under the same name ('first of all'—vo pervych—Russ. p. 196) to our Sovereign, to religious and civil governors, to instructors and benefactors, to masters and elders, all due reverence and subjection, and to every man sincere love. . . This commandment requires (p. 247): 1. That we should honour our parents. 2. That we obey the Sovereign, who is the supreme magistrate and the first governor under God.<sup>3</sup>

'The duty of the Sovereign is to endeavour to promote the peace and happiness of his subjects, to see that justice be dispensed and transgressors punished; that the spiritual and civil powers perform the duties belonging to their offices; to reward the good and punish the irregular and wicked; and in everything to show himself a father who diligently careth for the good of his children. Also to promote the prosperity of the Church, and defend her against despisers and defamers; to propagate her doctrines, and thereby civilise his subjects, and bring them to the practice of piety; for the Holy Ghost, in Isaiah xlix. 23, calleth orthodox Sovereigns, "Nursing Fathers of the Church." This commandment further requires men—

<sup>1</sup> Яко никакому закону человеческому неподлежащаго. Ibid.

<sup>2</sup> Государь не имѣя никого на земли вышшаго себя, ни отъ кого за труды свои награжденъ быть не можетъ, p. 131.

<sup>3</sup> Яко перваго по Богѣ правителя. ib. Часть. iii. § 9, No. 2. p. 197.

3. To be subject both to religious and civil governors; to love them unfeignedly, defend their honour, render them all due respect, and suffer patiently their reproofs. But the duty of religious powers is to instruct men in the way of salvation and recommend good morality; and that of the civil powers to administer justice, and observe that those who are subject to them perform the respective duties of their stations.

4. We are required to love our instructors,' &c.

Let us pause here. The above abstracts, we are well aware, do not positively and distinctly confer on the Tsar either the title or the functions of supreme ruler of the Church, and we should not wonder if they fall short of the expectation of the reader. A single remark, however, will enable him to realise the doctrine virtually contained in Peter's and Platon's Catechisms, and above all, the practical influence of the abstracts which we have quoted on the minds of the people.

There are cases in which no eloquence or amount of argument whatever has the force of a calculated omission. This system is then especially effective, when circumstances are such that people cannot supply of themselves that omission, but everything leads them to adopt erroneous statements conformable to the will of him by whom the omission was caused. Now the Russian people are told that—

1. The highest fatherly dignity, next God, is that of the Tsar (Pet. Cat). 2. The Tsar is the first governor under God (Plat.). 3. The Tsar has nobody on the earth higher than himself (Plat). 4.

The spiritual governors come next to the Tsar (Pet. Cat.). 5. The Tsar is not subjected to any human law. Faith alone can keep him in the path of justice and reward him (Plat.). 6. The Tsar is the chief guardian (provider) and protector of the Church (Plat.). 7. It is in matters respecting the essence of faith that the Church must obey nobody but Christ Himself, and the evident testimony of the Word of God (Plat.). 8. He who rules over the people has to have a watchful eye to all ecclesiastical, military, and civil affairs (Pet. Cat.). 9. He has to see that the spiritual powers perform the duties belonging to their office (Plat.).—They were also taught, it is true, that ‘the duty of spiritual governors is to instruct men in the way of salvation;’ but at the same time they learned that—10. A king has to seek what is the best for his subjects both in temporals and spirituals (Pet. Cat.).

How could simple people infer from these premisses alone the conclusion that the spiritual power is separate and independent in its own sphere from the civil? And the more so as people heard their Tsars and Tsarinas, without any opposition from the clergy, openly declare that—11. The Tsar has been invested by God with the supreme authority in the Church (Cath. II.). 12. The Tsar is the head of the Church<sup>1</sup> (Paul I.). 13. The supreme autho-

<sup>1</sup> In order to prevent people from considering the Tzar as ‘head of the Church’ in the same sense in which Jesus Christ is so, the following article, with the annexed note, was inserted in the Russian Code of Laws :—

Article 42. ‘The Emperor, as Christian Sovereign, is the supreme defender and protector of the dogmas of the orthodox faith, the guardian of orthodoxy and of all good order in the Holy Church.

Note.—It is in that sense that the Emperor is called Head of the Church in the Act of succession to the throne. Law of April 5, 1797 (17,910). CB. 3AK. ed. 1857, pp. 10, 11.

Then immediately follows the 43rd article, which our readers already know, and which runs as follows :—

rity given by God to the Tsar, being equally extended over the ecclesiastical order, the clergy ought to obey him as the chief (nachalnik) chosen by God Himself in all civil as well as religious matters (Paul I.);—and knew that the ‘Spiritual Regulation,’ the very manual of canon laws explained to the clergy in the seminaries and ecclesiastical schools, stigmatised as ‘a prejudice of ignorant people’ the doctrine that ‘the spiritual order constitutes a sovereignty superior, or even equal, to that of the Tsar!’ (Spir. Reg. See above, p. 76.)

No one, we believe, will accuse us of exaggeration if, out of this series of aphorisms, we draw the only conclusion that the mere idea of the ecclesiastical power’s independence of the civil power has long since disappeared in Russia, and that the government of the Church, with which the bishops are entrusted, is in Russia understood only in the sense of their being entrusted with the administration of the sacraments, the teaching of the Word of God, and the execution of orders enacted either directly by the Tsar or by a State institution representing the Tsar. As to the right the Church holds from Jesus Christ of governing herself—this right of self-government, which every English Dissenter immediately feels to be a condition of his Church’s very existence as a Church—this right, which everyone feels to be a thing quite distinct and separate from the mere right of performing religious services or teaching particular doctrines—this is not even claimed as a right by the Russian Orthodox Church!!

‘In the administration of the Church, the autocratical authority acts by means of the Holy Governing Synod appointed by him’ (Art. 43). See above, pp. 20 and 48–56.

No more is required in order that the Pope be just as much the administrator of the whole Catholic Church as the Tsar is so for his own. We remind our readers that there is no question here of the doctrinal authority of the Pope, but only of his administrative power, viz., his supreme power of jurisdiction over the universal Church.

Nay, it is with sorrow that, from the last of the three mentioned Catechisms—that of Mgr. Filaret, the late illustrious metropolitan of Moscow—we exemplify this omission in his speaking of the episcopal power: ‘Q. What is it to feed the Church?’<sup>1</sup> (S. Paul, Acts xx. 28).—A. To instruct the people in faith, piety, and good works.—Q. How many necessary degrees are there of orders?—A. Three: those of bishop, priest, and deacon.—Q. What difference is there between them?—A. The deacon serves at the sacraments; the priest hallows the sacraments in dependence on the bishop; the bishop not only hallows the sacraments himself, but has power also to impart to others, by the laying on of his hands, the gift and grace to hallow them.’<sup>2</sup>

The Catechism of Mgr. Filaret, we are very glad to be able to say, is far more orthodox than the two we have been dealing with; moreover, in speaking of the Holy Synod, and of its holding in the hierarchy the same rank with the Eastern Orthodox patriarchs, he supports his assertion by referring the reader to the Letters of the Most Holy

<sup>1</sup> The passage of the Acts of the Apostles (xx. 28), here alluded to, is translated in the Latin Vulgate:—‘Attendite vobis et universo gregi in quo vos Spiritus Sanctus posuit Episcopos regere Ecclesiam Dei.’ The Greek word translated by regere is ποιμαίνειν, which in the New Testament alone is four times rendered by rule in the English translation ‘appointed to be read in the Churches’:—

‘Shall (J. C.) rule my people Israel.’—Matt. ii. 6.

‘He shall rule them with a rod of iron.’—Rev. ii. 27.

‘Who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron.’—Ibid. xii. 5.

‘He shall rule them with a rod of iron.’—Ibid. xix. 15.

See Bruder (Car. Herm.), Ταμείον τῶν τῆς καινῆς διαθήκης λέξεων, sive Concordantia omnium vocum Testamenti Græci (Lipsiæ, 1842); and The Englishman’s Greek Concordance of the New Testament (London: Central Tract Depot, 1839).

See, for the Old Testament, Abr. Trommii Concordantia Græcæ Versionis vulgo dictæ LXX Interpretum. Amstelodami et Trajecti ad Renum, 1718.

<sup>2</sup> Filaret: The Longer Catechism of the Orthodox Catholic Eastern Church, translated by the Rev. R. W. Blackmore, in ‘The Doctrine of the Russian Church,’ part i. On Faith, x. art. On Orders, pp. 95, 96.

Patriarchs on the institution of the Most Holy Synod, and not to any ukase of the Tsars.<sup>1</sup> Finally, in speaking of those who stand to us in the place of parents he puts well in the first place the Sovereign (adding, however, 'and our country'); but he does not at all confer on the Tsar any right of high inspection over the bishops, far less of enacting laws for the welfare of the Church, and totally abstains from mentioning the independence of the Tsar on anybody upon the earth.<sup>2</sup>

All this we readily acknowledge and make known; yet still we deplore the omission we have already alluded to, and that the episcopal office is reduced to the bare administration of the sacraments and the teaching of the Word of God. Nay, the prescriptions we have quoted from the 'Spiritual Regulation' and the 'Statute of the Ecclesiastical Consistories,' the statements of the Russian jurists, the enactments of the Tsars and the language of their ukases, the principles laid down in the two Russian Catechisms, which up to the year 1820 were generally made use of for the religious teaching of the people, the important omissions in the Catechism of Mgr. Filaret — all this evidently proves that the very theory of the government of the Church is profoundly altered and curtailed in the Russian Empire.

It has cost us much trouble to get together all the evidence we have hitherto brought forward; and it was one thought only, viz. that of contributing, by the publicity given to the fact of the enslavement of the Russian Church, towards hastening the day of her delivery, that made us persevere in the toilsome task. The same thought induces us not to overlook what we are going to state—we mean the tokens of servility to—wards the Tsar which overspread the very performance of the religious services of the Russian Orthodox Church, and which are exhibited in her liturgical books.

<sup>1</sup> The Longer Catechism, part i. 'On Faith,' Article ix. p. 83.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid. part iii. 'On Charity,' Fifth Commandment, pp. 132, 133.

Whoever casts a glance on any liturgical books whatever cannot help remarking a peculiarity which they possess in common with dedicatory epistles or other writings of that kind. The monotonous uniformity of characters is broken by some words in large type, and always in capital letters. These are the names of the Tsar and other members of the imperial family, or even the mere title by which they are designated. A special ukase of the Senate prescribed that the Emperor's title should always and everywhere (in official papers) be written in capital letters.<sup>1</sup> The same privilege is also extended to the relative pronoun ego (his), eya (her), when designating the same personages. We need not comment on the adoption of the same rule in the liturgical books, as the comparison of the imperial family's names to the name of God, of the Blessed Virgin, and of the Saints, which are left without any token of distinction, forcibly occurs to the mind. Moreover, the exact and complete enumeration of the imperial family's members is to be found in the so-called ektenias,<sup>2</sup> as well as in the formula of approbation, prefixed to the printed volume of the Holy Scriptures, and to all the liturgical books of the Russian Church. The terms in which this approbation is couched, and which are invariably the same, deserve consideration.

<sup>1</sup> Полн. Собр. том. x. 7 Nov. 1739 (7934) p. 934. Императорскій Титуль печатать и писать вездѣ и всегда крупными литерами. Ib. том. xlii. Указ. Алфав. part i. Императорскій и Царскій Титуль. p. 768.

<sup>2</sup> The ektenia (ἐκτενῆς, extended) is an enlarged prayer. It consists of short petitions or biddings, with a response from the singers and people to each, such as 'Lord, have mercy,' 'Господи помилуй' (Κύριε ἐλέησον), or 'Lord, hear us,' or 'Grant us, O Lord.'

As an instance, we translate the formula of approbation of the Rite for admitting Dissenters into the bosom of the Oriental Orthodox Church' (ed. 1849):—

‘To the glory of the most holy, consubstantial, life-giving, and indivisible Trinity, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, by order (povelieniem) of our most pious and most autocratic Great Hossoudar, NICOLAS PAULOVICH, EMPEROR of all Russia; with HIS consort, the most pious Hossoudarina, the EMPRESS ALEXANDRA FEODOROVNA; HIS heir the orthodox Hossoudar the Cesarevich and Grand-prince ALEXANDER NICOLAEVICH; and HIS consort, the orthodox Hossoudarina Cesarevna and Grand-princess MARIA ALEXANDROVNA; with the orthodox Hossoudars the Grand-princes, NICOLAS, ALEXANDER, and VLADIMIR ALEXANDROVICH; the orthodox Hossoudar the Grand-prince CONSTANTINE NICOLAEVICH, and HIS consort the orthodox Hossoudarina the Grand-princess ALEXANDRA JOSEPHOVNA; the orthodox Hossoudars the Grand-princes NICOLAS and MICHAEL NICOLAEVICH; the orthodox Hossoudarinas the Grand-princess HELENE PAULOVNA, the Grand-princess MARIA NICOLAEVNA, and HER consort; the Grand-princess OLGA NICOLAEVNA, and HER consort; the Grand-princess CATHERINE MICHAELOVNA; the Grand-princess MARIA PAULOVNA, and HER consort; and the Queen of the Netherlands, ANNA PAULOVNA, and with the blessing (blagosloveniem) of the Most Holy Governing SYNOD,<sup>1</sup> this book—“The rite for admitting into the Orthodox Catholic Oriental Church the members of other confessions’—has been printed in the imperial great city of Moscow, in the printing-office of the Synod, in the year from the creation of the world 7358, and from the nativity in the flesh of the Word of God 1849, in the 8th of the indiction, in the month of October.'

<sup>1</sup> The word Synod is printed sometimes in capital letters, sometimes, as in the Ektenias, in common letters.

No doubt, church books might be printed by 'order' (poveleniem) of the Tsar, and with the 'blessing' (blagosloveniem) of the Primate, and the Tsar's name might be put first too without sin; and if the names of the Tsarina and of all the Tsar's children and their consorts were added, this might be done to associate them in a pious work, and to include them under the same blessing.<sup>1</sup> But since, unquestionably, the less is blessed of the greater, and no 'College' or 'Synod' created by the Tsar can be greater than the power which created it, the enumeration of all those names in the formula of approbation prefixed to ecclesiastical books and in the offices themselves, and the printing of them since Peter the Great,<sup>2</sup> and especially since 1739, in huge letters, and the frequent repetition of them all aloud in the church, produces now an impression suiting only too well the State supremacy established by Peter I., and unbalanced by the existence of any canonical primate whose blessing might be denied, and whose ban might be feared by the Tsar as well as by the peasant.

These reflections lead us to speak of the 'Rite for the election and consecration of a Bishop,' as they are equally applicable to some expressions made use of in that rite.

<sup>1</sup> The names of the children of the Tsar are to be seen, in small type however, previously to Peter the Great, in a book containing the office, life, and an account of the miracles of St. Nicholas printed at Moscow in 1672, and possessed by the British Museum (1018. g.  $\frac{1}{4}$ ) pp. ρξζ'-ρξη' verso.

<sup>2</sup> In a Prayer-book (МОИТВОСЛОВА) possessed by the British Museum (3355 a), and published at Kieff in 1729, the name of Peter II., then the only living member of his family, is already printed in large capital type.

From the formula of oath taken by the Russian bishops before being consecrated, we have already quoted the words by which they engage themselves to yield true obedience to the Holy Synod, ‘as the legitimate authority instituted by the pious Emperor Peter the Great, of immortal memory, and confirmed by command of his (or her) present Imperial Majesty,’ and to obey, besides the existing, ‘all other rules and statutes which shall be hereafter made by the authority of the Synod agreeably to the will of his (or her) Imperial Majesty.’<sup>1</sup> To these we must now add the following words taken from the same formula of oath. ‘Furthermore, I do testify by this my writing that I have not received this province in consideration of gold or silver promised or given by me, forasmuch as I have neither given nor promised anything to any person whatever in order to obtain this dignity; but I have received it by the free will of our most serene and most puissant (sovereign by name) and by the election of the Holy Legislative Synod.’<sup>2</sup> Moreover, at the beginning of the ceremony the Bishop-consecrator thus addresses the newly elected bishop: ‘Reverend Father N.—The most serene and most puissant Tsar N.N. hath commanded, by his own singular and proper edict, and the Holy Legislative Synod of all the Russias gives its benediction thereto, that you, holy sir, be bishop of the city of N.; whom God preserve.’ The future bishop is made to answer: ‘Since the most serene and most puissant Tsar N.N. has commanded, and the Holy Legislative Synod of all the Russias has judged me worthy to undertake this province, I give thanks therefore, and do undertake it and in no wise gainsay.’<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See above, pp. 65, 66.

<sup>2</sup> King: The Rites, etc., p. 295. For the Latin, Haigold, Beilagen, etc., i. p. 108; and for the German, Rajewski, Euchologion der orthodoxen, etc. ii. p. 91.

<sup>3</sup> King, ib. p. 291; Haigold, i. p. 101–2; Rajewski, ii. p. 86.

Here, again, we should indeed be happy to state that the 'free-will,' 'command,' and 'singular and proper edict' of the Tsar enforce a free election made by a canonical Primate and Synod. Even the 'thanksgiving' forced upon the newly elected bishop might then be explained in the sense that, being really unwilling to undertake the episcopal office, yet forced by his brethren and commanded by the Ruler of the State, he thanks them for their good opinion. But, unfortunately, we possess documents which prevent us from explaining, in such a Christian and charitable way, the expressions made use of in the rite for the election and consecration of bishops.

Among the 'points wherein His Most Serene Imperial Majesty, with his own august hand, hath vouchsafed a resolution' (see above, p. 26), and which are printed at the end of the 'Spiritual Regulation,' there is one in which the 'Spiritual College,' as it was still termed, though shortly afterwards to be re-named the 'Most Holy Governing Synod,' asks His Majesty to decide whether, for the vacant eparchies, the Spiritual Assembly (Synod) must propose any person to His Majesty's approbation. Peter the Great deigned to write on the petition: 'Let there be elected two persons, and let that one of the two whom we shall select be consecrated and selected.'<sup>1</sup> Undoubtedly Peter the Great might just as well have written on the petition: 'I take the care of this entirely on myself,' or, 'The Senate will appoint them,' or anything else according to his own will and pleasure. The mere fact of having asked the decision of the Tsar evinces that the newly created Synod did not consider the election of bishops to belong to itself as of right, so that, the presentation of two persons being usual, as it is, in consequence of a free decision of the Tsar, must be considered like all other presentations for civil employments made by the Senate or any of the Ministers. He who asks for a decision makes himself less than he from whom the decision is sought, and subjects himself to all the uncertainties of his will and pleasure. We must bear in mind, moreover, that the members of the Synod are appointed, maintained, and dismissed solely by the free will of the Tsar, and that apparent election by the Holy Synod will then appear, as it is in truth—let us say it again—nothing more than any similar presentation which might be made in any other department of the civil government. Finally, with regard to the ‘thanksgiving’ forced upon the newly elected bishop, we refer the reader to the way in which the episcopal office is spoken of in the ‘Spiritual Regulation,’ as the existence of any supernatural feeling in him who becomes a bishop is there no more supposed or alluded to<sup>1</sup> than it is in the same document with regard to monks.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> ПОЛН. СОБР. ЗАК. tom vi. (3734) Feb. 14, 1721, p. 356. Consett, p. 127.

Fancy, now, Athanasius, Chrysostom, Basilus, Gregorius, those great bishops of the ancient Greek Oriental Church, being summoned to utter, before their consecration, some analogous words in reference to the Emperor of Constantinople; fancy those men, so full of the spirit of St. Paul, who so eloquently pointed out the heavy burden of the episcopal office, being compelled to say: ‘Since the Emperor has so commanded, . . . I give thanks therefore!!’ Indeed from a Church whose bishops are compelled so profoundly to bow their neck to the Tsar, what more can be needed in order that the whole world be convinced that she is the slave of her Tsars? But still more can be said.

<sup>1</sup> See Spir. Reg. part ii. ‘Of the Bishops,’ Nos. 14, 15 Cons. and pp. 41–3 ПОЛН. СОБР. ЗАК. том. vi. Дух. Регл. (3718), pp. 324, 325.

<sup>2</sup> See above, pp. 15, 16, note.

We have already alluded to Neale's (Rev. John Mason's) writings on the Oriental Orthodox Church. Besides his great work, 'A History of the holy Eastern Church,' (London, 1850), dedicated to the Tsar Nicholas I., he published, among others, a pamphlet with the tempting title of 'Voices from the East: documents on the present state and working of the Oriental Church, translated from the original Russ, Slavonic, and French, with notes' (London, 1859). The last of these documents, and that to which our attention has been specially drawn, is headed, 'Expositions of Faith employed by the Holy Eastern Church, translated from the Russ of Macarius, Bishop of Vinnitza, &c.' (doc. viii. p. 209). After having spoken of the 'Orthodox Confession of the Catholic and Apostolic Church of the East,' and of the 'Letter of the Patriarchs of the East,' both of which have been mentioned at the beginning of this work,<sup>1</sup> Mgr. Makary, whom we have already quoted several times, goes on in the following terms:— 'Besides these two general confessions, there are particular confessions for particular cases as : 1. The oath of bishops. Important as any oath must be as a matter of faith, this is so additionally, because he who pronounces it is a man destined to be pastor and guardian of one particular Church, because he takes it solemnly in the Church, in presence of a vast number of the faithful, and before an assembly of prelates from whom he expects to receive Divine grace for the purpose of preaching the word of truth, and of feeding well the spiritual flock entrusted to him. . .' The reader is sufficiently acquainted with this oath, and with the doctrine therein asserted relating to the government of the Russian Church. Other remarks might well be made, but as they are not strictly connected with our subject, we pass them over in silence. Mgr. Makary then quotes :

<sup>1</sup> See above, p. 10. In Kimmel's Monumenta Fidei, etc., the 'Letter of the Patriarchs of the East' has the title of Dosithei Confessio.

‘ 2. Dogmatical questions to Jews and Saracens . . ; 3. The profession of faith pronounced by the members of other Christian confessions . . ; 4. The Formula of excommunication, composed of twelve articles, and pronounced in Orthodoxy Week ’ (Neale, pp. 213–14).

Let us pause here. This formula of excommunication forms part of the so-called Office of Orthodoxy,<sup>1</sup> which is performed on the Sunday of the first week of Lent. The original Greek is due, according to the ‘ Historical Account of the Liturgical Books of the Russian Greek Church,’<sup>2</sup> to the Patriarch of Constantinople, Methodius (A.D. 846), and is to be found in the Triodion.<sup>3</sup> Catherine II. seems to have found it too long, and by a special ukase charged the archimandrite Gabriel, afterwards metropolitan of Novgorod and St. Petersburg, to shorten and recast it, which order having been complied with, the Russian Office of Orthodoxy was first printed in its actual form in the year 1761.<sup>4</sup>

The formula of excommunication was also reduced to twelve articles, in which the greatest heresies which afflicted the Church are pointed out, and their chiefs and followers pronounced three times over to be excluded from the Church. One of these articles runs as follows:— ‘ To those who think that Orthodox Sovereigns are not raised to their throne by a special good pleasure of God concerning them, and that at the unction (pri pomazanii) the gifts of the Holy Ghost are not poured out (izlivaïotsa) upon them in order to the fulfilment of this great vocation,

<sup>1</sup> Чинъ православія. It is printed in a separate book, under the title of ‘ Послѣдованіе въ недѣлю православія.’ The edition we have made use of is that of Moscow, 1850.

<sup>2</sup> Историческое обозрѣніе богослужебныхъ книгъ греко-россійской церкви. Kieff, 1836.

<sup>3</sup> Τριάδιον. Κυριακὴ τῆς α' ἐβδομάδος τῇ κυριακῇ τῆς ὀρθοδοξίας.

<sup>4</sup> This account is taken from Eugeny's Словарь историческій, etc. Спб. 1827, i. p. 83; and the Историч. обзор. p. 191.

and who, in consequence, dare to rebel against them and to betray them, as Grishka, Otrepieff, Ivan Mazeppa, and others like them, anathema! anathema! anathema!’<sup>1</sup>

We altogether abstain from commenting on this anathema, and hasten to make a last quotation from official documents, in order to complete our work. Nothing has been more pernicious to the Orthodox Church of Russia than the praises and approbation which the acts and policy of her Tsars have met with, and that saying of Tacitus, ‘Pessimum inimicorum genus laudantes’ (Agr. xli.), has in no case, perhaps, been more strikingly justified. Leaving therefore other writers to extol as they please Peter’s ecclesiastical reform, and to cry out, with Theophane Prokopovich: ‘Behold, O Church of Russia, thy David and thy Constantine!’<sup>2</sup> we will go on with our own observations.

<sup>1</sup> Помышляющимъ яко православные Государи возводятся на престолы не по особливому о нихъ Божественную благоволенію и при помазаніи дарованія Святаго Духа къ прохожденію великаго сего званія въ нихъ не изливаются; и тако держающимъ противъ ихъ на бунтъ и измѣну, яко Гришкѣ, Отрепьеву, Ивану Мазенѣ, и прочимъ подобнымъ: анаѣма. (Трижды) Чинъ прав. ed. Mosc. 1850, p. 8.

See Rajewski, Euchologion, etc., Theil III. p. 136; King, The Rites, etc. p. 404.

<sup>2</sup> See Lacrymæ Roxolanæ, seu de obitu Petri Magni totius Rossiæ Imperatoris brevis narratio, duæque de laudibus ejusdem divi principis orationes, auct. Theophane Archiep. Novo-Grodensi (Revaliæ, 1726), p. 22. These orations have been translated into English by Consett, The Present State, &c., tom. ii. See p. 283.

Haigold’s admiration for Peter’s ecclesiastical reform soars almost to the height of lyric poetry, though of a comical kind: ‘Wie weislich schuf er (Peter) seinen Pabst (the Patriarch) in eine Synode um; wie künstlich flocht er das Band des Staats, der Kirche und der Klöster wieder, das der Aberglaube zerrissen hatte!’—Beilagen zum neuveränderten Russland, Band I. Vorrede, p. 62, verso.

The Russian code of laws has some articles concerning the secret of confession. They are the following:—

(Criminal Code, book ii. divisions iii. and vii.)

Art. 245. ‘Priests are forbidden to reveal, in giving evidence, what their penitents may have said to them in confession, except in the (following) cases’:—

Art. 598. ‘If a man, in confession, discloses to his confessor the existence of a plot against the honour and health of the Sovereign, or of intention to excite rebellion and treason, and whilst he makes this disclosure does not show repentance nor the intention of desisting from it, but mentions it in confession solely in order that, by the consent or silence of his confessor, he may be the more confirmed in his criminal design, then the confessor is to give information of this immediately, seeing that such is not a legitimate confession, because the penitent does not repent of ALL his iniquities.’<sup>1</sup>

We leave to the reader to judge for himself what must become of the secret of confession if it be once admitted that the want of repentance for any sin not only prevents the confession from being legitimate and true (which is also the Catholic doctrine if the sin is a mortal one), but moreover justifies the confessor in giving information of such sin to others, at the command of the civil government. But, to proceed.

<sup>1</sup> 245. Священникамъ запрещается объявлять во свидѣтельство то, что духовныя ихъ дѣти скажутъ имъ на исповѣди, исключая случаевъ (сейчасъ) означенныхъ.

598. Если кто при исповѣди объявить духовному отцу своему объ умыслѣ на честь и здравіе Государя, или о намѣреніи произвести бунтъ и измѣну, и объявляя о томъ, не покажетъ раскаянія и намѣренія оное отложить, но единственно исповѣдуетъ о семъ, дабы согласіемъ или молчаніемъ духовника въ преступномъ намѣреніи своемъ болѣе утвердиться; то духовному отцу доносить о томъ немедленно, такъ какъ таковая исповѣдь не есть правильная, ибо исповѣдывающійся не о всѣхъ беззаконіяхъ своихъ кается. (Сводъ Закон. ed. 1857, tom. xv. Зак. Суд. Уголовн. Кн. ii. Разд. iii. p. 46, and Разд. vii. p. 113.)

‘Nevertheless’ (so runs the following article, 599), ‘it is the duty of the confessor, in giving such information, not to reveal in detail what has been disclosed to him in confession, but only to say that such an one, naming him, and mentioning his condition, has an evil design against the Sovereign or the State, and persists in it without repenting. In consequence of this information the suspected person must be immediately apprehended and put under arrest. After he has been arrested, and the criminal process against him has begun, the confessor is bound to reveal all that he has heard concerning that criminal design, without any sort of reticence, in all details.’<sup>1</sup>

A note appended to these articles in the Russian code of laws, refers the reader to the ukase of May 17, 1722 (4012), and to the Nos. xi. and xii. of the ‘Appendix’ to the ‘Spiritual Regulation.’ In No. xi. the reader will find the arguments alleged in order to tranquillize the conscience of the priest. Besides the one already quoted, and which was incorporated in Article 598, the ‘Appendix’ to the

<sup>1</sup> Однакожь надлежитъ духовнику, въ томъ объявленіи, не открывать именно показанное на исповѣди, но токмо въ ономъ сказать, что такой-то, показавъ его има и званіе, имѣеть слой умыселъ противъ Государя или Государства и пераскаянное къ тому намѣреніе; въ слѣдствіе сего извѣщенія, подозрѣваемый немедленно долженъ быть взятъ подъ стражу. По взятіи же его и начатіи уголовнаго слѣдствія, духовникъ обязанъ все о томъ зломъ намѣреніи слышанное объявить безъ всякой утайки во всей подробности, ib., art. 599.

‘Spiritual Regulation’ points out another taken from the Holy Scripture.

‘The priest’ (it is there said in No. xi.) ‘shall declare all that he has heard of that villanous design, explicitly and plainly, without any disguise or hesitation—for by this declaration the spiritual person (the confessor) does not discover a perfect (soverchennoi) confession, nor offend against the canons (pravil), but rather fulfils Our Lord’s doctrine, which teaches that, ‘If thy brother trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone; if he shall hear thee thou hast gained thy brother; but if he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established. And if he shall neglect to hear them, TELL IT TO THE CHURCH.’ (Matt. xviii. 15, 16, 17.<sup>1</sup>)

This is certainly an interpretation of Holy Scripture which needs no comment!

Those histories of Peter’s life and acts which have been written out of Russia, when speaking of the establishment of the Synod, commonly relate that, in an ecclesiastical assembly, when some allusions had been made to the Patriarchate as unsuppressed—‘I am,’ said Peter, ‘your Patriarch.’—Some Russians have denied the authenticity of these words, and we are, indeed, indisposed to make it a subject of discussion. Still it is instructive to notice the way in which the same fact is related by a Russian writer, as having happened in the very first meeting of the 'Spiritual College' (Synod).

<sup>1</sup> . . . Ибо симъ объявленіемъ духовникъ не объявляетъ совершенной исповѣди, и не преступаетъ правилъ, но еще исполняетъ ученіе Господне, тако реченное: ‘аще согрѣшитъ къ тебѣ братъ твой, иди и обличи его шежду тобою и тѣмъ единымъ; аще тебе послушаетъ, приобрѣлъ еси брата твоего,’ и прочая. ‘Аще же не послушаетъ, повѣждай Церкви.’ (Матѣ. гл. xviii. 15, 16, 17). Spir. Reg. Append. No. 11 Cons. pp. 137, 138, and Полн. Собр. Зак. tom. vi. (4022) p. 701.

'The idea,' so says Nic. Polevoy, 'that spiritual matters do not appertain to the authority of the Sovereign was still so deeply rooted in men's minds that, in the very first session of the Spiritual College, some members dared (osmelilis) to ask the Emperor: "Is then the patriarchal dignity suppressed, although nothing has been said about it?" — 'I am your Patriarch (ya vash Patriarkh)' exclaimed angrily (gnevno) Peter, striking his breast. The questioners were dumb (umolki). The long habit of seeing the Church governed without a patriarch had this effect, that the people accepted with submission the establishment of the Spiritual College.'<sup>1</sup>

This account of Peter's coup d'état (see above, p. 38) was printed at St. Petersburg in the year 1843, and, be it observed, not without the approbation of the censors.

No more is required, we think, to show that with the Tsar who in 1843 ruled over Russia—'still abode the care OF ALL THE PASTORS, and the guardianship of the flock, and that Peter I. and Paul I.'s dignity had in 1843 not failed in their successors.' (See above, p. 80).

Now, before English Protestant divines we lay these questions: Whether that Russian Church of which we have spoken, bears sufficient marks of her being governed according to the will of Jesus Christ? And if not, whether she may confidently be relied upon as possessing the fulness of revealed truth? That Russian Church, we mean, which has been ruled by Peter the Great and the Voltairian Catherine II., that Church which adopted for general use in the schools the Catechisms of Prokopovich and of Platon, both which were judged by the Protestants themselves to be rather Protestant than Orthodox; that Russian Church, which is spoken of in the classical works of the Russian jurists;—the Russian Church, in a word, as she is represented in imperial ukases still in force, in the ‘Spiritual Regulation,’ in the ‘Statute of the Ecclesiastical Consistories,’ and the Russian Code of Laws.

<sup>1</sup> Ист. Петра Великаго, сочиш. Николая Полеваго. Спб. 1843, t. iv. p. 212.

Can Anglican divines safely and confidently, in the spirit of union, hasten to greet and embrace this Church?

AS TO THE REST of the Oriental Orthodox Church, we lay again before them the question: Whether the solemn approbation given by her Patriarchs to the establishment of the Synod; her forbearance in presence of the Tsar’s encroachments upon their Church; her silence concerning the Catechisms of Peter the Great and of Platon being generally adopted in the Russian schools; the way in which her writers<sup>1</sup> speak of Peter’s ecclesiastical reform, and his successor’s acts, completing his work—in a word, whether the Orthodox Church’s connivance at the pretensions and dealings of the Tsars in the Russian Empire does not constitute a serious charge against her? And the more so if one considers that, standing beyond the limits of the Russian empire, her bishops had not to fear, like the Russian, the ill-treatment and tortures by means of which the Russian autocrat, more than once, stifled not only attempts at, but even mere aspirations after liberty? <sup>1</sup> We search in vain for a single protest, or any other act of the kind! But, moreover, she herself offers such features as should lead English divines to ask again if she is governed according to the will of Jesus Christ, and consequently if they can safely and confidently embrace her? We confine ourselves to some few statements concerning, first, the Orthodox Church of the Kingdom of Greece, and then that of the Turkish Empire.

<sup>1</sup> See, for instance, Meletius, Metrop. of Athens. Ἐκκλησιαστικὴ ἱστορία (Vienna, 1783–95), tom. iv. c. iv. § 10, pp. 32, 33.

For the bibliography of the Greek Oriental Orthodox Church see the Νεοελληνικὴ Φιλολογία of Papadopoulos Vretos, and especially Const. Satha’s most useful work: Νεοελληνικὴ Φιλολογία. — Βιογραφίαι τῶν ἐν τοῖς γράμμασι διαλαμπάντων Ἑλλήνων ἀπὸ τῆς καταλύσεως τῆς Βυζαντινῆς αὐτοκρατορίας μέχρι τῆς Ἑλληνικῆς ἐθνεγερσίας (1453–1821). Ἐν Ἀθῆναις, 1868.

‘On the 15th (27th) July, 1833,’ says J. M. Neale, ‘a national Synod met at Nauplia, then the seat of government, to devise some plan for the regeneration of the Greek Church. It must be confessed that this body was uncanonically assembled, owning no higher convocants than Tricoupi, Minister of Worship, and Schinas, of Education. The two following propositions <sup>2</sup> were presented to

<sup>1</sup> The striking contradiction between the conduct of the Patriarch of Constantinople in 1722, when he solemnly recognised the Holy Synod of St. Petersburg, and the conduct of his successor, who in 1833, alleging the violation of the holy canons, so strongly opposed the establishment of the Synod of Athens, created after the model of the Russian Church, could not fail to be made a subject of reproach to the Church of Constantinople, and so it has been. See further on, chap. ii. pp. 134, 135, note, and chap. iii. p. 152.

<sup>2</sup> These propositions form the two first articles of the “Declaration of the Independence of the Greek Church” officially published by King Otho on July 23 (Aug. 4) 1833. They read as follows:

1. ‘Ἡ ὀρθόδοξος Ἀνατολικὴ Ἀποστολικὴ Ἐκκλησία τοῦ Βασιλείου τῆς Ἑλλάδος, ἐν Πνεύματι μὴ ἀναγνωρίζουσα ἄλλην κεφαλὴν παρὰ τὸν Θεμελιωτὴν τῆς Χριστιανικῆς πίστεως τὸν Κύριον καὶ Σωτῆρα ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν, κατὰ δὲ τὸ διοικητικὸν μέρος ἔχουσα ἀρχηγὸν τὸν βασιλέα τῆς Ἑλλάδος, εἶναι αὐτοκέφαλος καὶ ἀνεξάρτητος ἀπὸ πάσης ἄλλης ἐξουσίας, φυλαττομένης ἀπαραχαράκτου τῆς δογματικῆς ἐνότητος, κατὰ τὰ παρὰ πασῶν τῶν ὀρθοδόξων Ἀνατολικῶν ἐκκλησιῶν ἀνέκαθεν πρεσβευόμενα.

2. ‘Ἡ ὑπεράττη Ἐκκλησιαστικὴ ἐξουσία ἐναπόκειται, ὑπὸ τὴν τοῦ βασιλέως κυριαρχίαν, εἰς χεῖρας Συνόδου διαρκoῦς, φεροῦσης τὸ ὄνομα “Ἱερὰ it, and in a free and private deliberation (members of the Government having withdrawn), approved by thirty-six prelates:—"1. The Eastern Orthodox and Apostolic Church of Greece, which SPIRITUALLY owns no Head but the Head of the Christian Faith, Jesus Christ our Lord, is dependent on no external authority, while she preserves unshaken dogmatic unity with all the Eastern Orthodox Churches. With respect to the administration of the Church, which pertains to the crown, she acknowledges THE KING OF GREECE AS HER SUPREME HEAD, as in nothing contrary to the holy canons. 2. A permanent Synod shall be established, consisting entirely of archbishops and bishops, appointed by the King: to be the highest ecclesiastical authority, after the model of the Russian Church." <sup>1</sup> Accordingly, what, as regards the Russian Tsars, we have been proving, with much trouble and long research, as regards the kings of Greece was fairly and plainly asserted by the national Synod of Nauplia, composed of all the bishops of Greece! Besides, the Statute-law (νόμος καταστατικὸς) of the Holy Synod of Greece contains the following article: 'To the Holy Synod there will be appointed by the King a royal delegate, who, before entering on his functions, will take, in presence of the King, the oath prescribed by law. And since to the supreme royal authority, in which the governing power is lodged, belongs also the inspection of whatever happens within the kingdom, the royal delegate has a mission to assist, without a vote, at every sitting of the Holy Synod, and to countersign the original of whatever is decided or put in force by the Holy Synod, whether as concerns its internal or external affairs. Moreover, Σύνδος τοῦ βασιλείου τῆς Ἑλλάδος," Nicolopoulos and Kakoulidi, Συλλογὴ ἀπάντων τῶν νόμων, etc., Athens, 1859, tom. i. (49), p. 118.

<sup>1</sup> Neale (J. M.), A History of the Holy Eastern Church, Gen. Introd. i. p. 60.

every decision and act of the Holy Synod, taken in the absence of the royal delegate, or not bearing his countersign, will be null.'<sup>1</sup>

We are well aware, and are extremely glad to state it on most reliable information, that in practice the King's interference in the administration of the Hellenic Orthodox Church is by no means so extended and vexatious as to be compared to that of the Tsar in the administration of the Russian Orthodox Church. Let us, however, take here notice of the fact that all the bishops of Greece, assembled in a national council, have solemnly professed to hold, as in nothing contrary to the holy canons,<sup>2</sup> that, with respect to her administration (or government—διοικητικὸν) the Supreme Head (ἀρχηγὸς) of the Hellenic Church is the King of Greece.

FINALLY, as to the Greek Orthodox Church of the Turkish Empire, the Church of the Patriarchates of Constantinople, Alexandria, Antioch, and Jerusalem, the following judgment was passed upon her by an eminent dignitary of the State Church of England: "In Con-

: Νόμος καταστατικὸς τῆς Ἱερᾶς Συνόδου τῆς Ἐκκλησίας τῆς Ἑλλάδος τῆς 9 Ἰουλίου, 1852, art. 6.

. . . Παρὰ τῇ Ἱερᾷ Συνόδῳ διορίζεται ὑπὸ τοῦ Βασιλέως βασιλικὸς ἐπίτροπος, ὅστις, πρὶν ἢ ἀναλάβῃ τὰ καθήκοντα διὰ τοῦ, δίδει ἐνώπιον τοῦ Βασιλέως τὸν νεομισμένον ὄρκον τοῦ δημοσίου ὑπαλλήλου. Ἐπειδὴ δὲ εἰς τὴν ὑπερτάτην βασιλικὴν ἐξουσίαν, ἐς ἣν ἐναπόκειται ἡ κυριαρχία τοῦ Κράτους ἀνήκει καὶ ἡ ἐποπτεία ἐφ' ὅλων τῶν ἐντὸς τοῦ Βασιλείου γινομένων, ὁ βασιλικὸς ἐπίτροπος ἔχει τὸ καθήκον νὰ παρευρίσκηται, ἄνευ ψήφου, εἰς ὅλας ἐν γένει τὰς συνεδριάσεις τῆς Ἱερᾶς Συνόδου, καὶ νὰ προσυπογράφηται εἰς ὅλα τὰ πρωτότυπα τῶν παρὰ τῆς Ἱερᾶς Συνόδου ἐκδιδόμενων ἀποφάσεων καὶ πράξεων, ἀναγομένων εἴτε εἰς τὰ ἐσωτερικὰ εἴτε εἰς τὰ ἐξωτερικὰ αὐτῆς καθήκοντα. Πᾶσι δὲ ἀπόφασις ἢ πράξις τῆς Ἱερᾶς Συνόδου, γινομένη ἐν ἀπουσίᾳ τοῦ βασιλικοῦ ἐπιτρόπου, ἢ μὴ φέρουσα τὴν προσυπογραφὴν αὐτοῦ εἶναι ἄκυρος. Rhallès, Οἱ Ἑλληνικοὶ κώδικες. (Athens, 1856), tom. ii. p. 634 et seq.—Συλλογὴ etc. tom. ii. (810) p. 732 et seq.

<sup>2</sup> See Pitra, (Card.), Des Canons et des Collections canoniques de l'Église grecque (Paris, Durand, 1858), pp. 35–37.

stantinople the Sultan still exercises the right which he inherited from the last of the Cæsars; and the virtual appointment and deposition of the patriarchs still places in his hands the government of the Byzantine Church—a power, no doubt, more scandalous and more pernicious in the hands of the Mussulman than it was in the hands of the Christian despot, but not more decided and absolute. And how high a place is occupied by the Emperor of Russia will be seen,' &c.<sup>1</sup>

Besides, in a Letter 'to all the Orthodox faithful of the world' (May 6, 1848), in answer to that of Pius IX. 'to the Christians of the East' (January 6, 1848), the four Patriarchs of Constantinople, Alexandria, Antioch, and Jerusalem solemnly profess to hold as follows:—
'Les patriarches d'Alexandrie, d'Antioche, de Jérusalem, dans les cas extraordinaires et difficiles, écrivent au patriarche de Constantinople, parce que cette ville est le siège de l'Empire, et à cause de la préséance de ce siège dans les Synodes; et si le concours fraternel remédie à la perplexité, la chose en reste là; sinon on s'en réfère au pouvoir temporel suivant les lois. Mais ce concours fraternel, dans les affaires de la foi chrétienne, ne s'exerce pas au prix de l'asservissement des Églises de Dieu.'

The temporal power or government (διοίκησις) here alluded to is that of the Sultan. On the Sultan then devolves the final settlement of the questions which cannot be ended by the sentence of the Œcumenical Patriarch of Constantinople. One is entitled to ask after this, if, when recently the Sultan himself undertook to settle the question concerning the independence of the Bulgarian Church, he did anything but exercise a right solemnly conferred upon him by the representatives of the whole Greek Orthodox Church of the Turkish Empire?

<sup>1</sup> Stanley (A.P., Dean of Westminster), Lectures on the History of the Eastern Church, 4th. ed. (London, 1869.) Lect. I. p. 41.

<sup>2</sup> Οἱ Πατριάρχαι τῆς Ἀλεξανδρείας, τῆς Ἀντιοχείας, τῶν Ἱεροσολύμων εἰς τὰ παραδόξως συμπεσόντα καὶ δυσδιευθέτητα γράφουσιν εἰς τὸν Κωνσταντινουπόλεως, διὰ τὸ εἶναι ἔδραν Αὐτοκρατορικὴν, ἔτι δὲ καὶ διὰ τὸ Συνοδικὸν Πρεσβεῖον· καὶ εἰ μὲν ἡ ἀδελφικὴ σύμπραξις διορθώσει τὸ διορθωτέον, εὖ ἔχει· εἰ δὲ μὴ, ἀναγγέλλεται τὸ πρᾶγμα καὶ εἰς τὴν Διοίκησιν κατὰ τὰ καθεστῶτα. Encycl., p. 60. Pitzipios' L'Église orientale, part i. p. 140.

The above-quoted French translation is taken from the Lettre encyclique de S.S. le Pape Pie IX aux Chrétiens d'Orient, et Encyclique responsive des Patriarches et des Synodes de l'Église d'Orient, traduites du grec par le Dr. Démétrius Dallas (Paris, 1850). Enc. resp. p. 51.

But, moreover, this policy, the recourse to the final decision of the Sultan, is quoted by the Oriental Patriarchs and their Synods in opposition to that followed in the Catholic Church, and pointed out as the one which does not trench upon the freedom and independence of the Churches of God!

What a strange idea of ecclesiastical freedom and independence! It agrees only too well with the exaggerations of the following address, presented to the Sultan on the occasion of the concessions granted by him in 1853 to the different religious communities of the empire. We have translated it from the original Greek, as it may be seen in the Greek newspaper, the ‘Ἀθηνᾶ,’ together with the address of the Jews.

Address of thanksgiving of the Œcumenical Patriarch, and of that of Jerusalem, to the Ottoman Government.

‘The Greek patriarchs of Constantinople and Jerusalem, the metropolitans and bishops of the supreme order, the principals of the nation, and the chiefs of the corporations (τῶν συντεχνιῶν), subjects of the Sublime Porte, submit the present address of thanksgiving at the feet (εἰς τοὺς πόδας) of the most high and most just throne, and of the most merciful autocratic threshold (βάθρου), may it be preserved (εἴη διατηρούμενον) to the end of the world! Our humble nation, which glories (το σεμνυνόμενον) in its faithful subjection and submission to the autocratic Government, be it blessed for ever! (ἦν εὐχεται αἰῶνιον) of His Majesty the Sultan, our master and benefactor, having called together, in our patriarchate, an assembly of our nation (γενικὴν), in order to have there read, in presence of your servants, now in Constantinople, the metropolitans, the principals of the nation, and the chiefs of the different corporations, the Hatti Sheriff of His Highness, by which are confirmed the special conditions, concessions, and spiritual privileges granted by the great Autocrats and illustrious Sultans of everlasting memory, &c. . . . the undersigned were overwhelmed with infinite joy and everlasting gratitude.

‘It is beyond the range of our possibility, by act or word, to make due acknowledgment for one only (καὶ μόνον) of the kindnesses, privileges, or concessions which have been granted to our humble nation, in such a manner as to attract the jealousy of the other nations (of the empire), and make the glory of our own, according to the usual compasssion (ἐκ τῆς συνήθους ἐυσπλαγχνίας) of His Imperial Majesty the most august and most powerful Sultan, compassionate toward all, who is glorified by his own deeds, benefactor of the world (τοῦ ἐνεργέτου τοῦ κόσμου), our peculiar benefactor, who is the ornament of the crown of the Sultans, and who gains the admiration of the whole earth by his bounties and by all his other perfections (καὶ τὰς ἄλλας αὐτοῦ ἐντελείας).

‘All the world knows (πασίγνωστον) that the security (ἀσφάλεια) and the tranquillity (ἡσυχία) of all his subjects are perfect (τέλειαι), thanks to the protection, full of justice, of the Imperial Government, to which is confided, as a divine pledge (ὡς θεῖον ἐιέχυρον), the wellbeing and contentment (ἄνεσις) of all the inhabitants of the empire. Thus our nation considers, as the very first of its religious and legal (νομίμων) duties, to remain, with all its heart and soul, for ever constant in its submission and subjection to the Imperial Government, and to shed its last drop of blood for the august person of His Majesty; and night and day it prays God the Almighty, with its women and children, with uncovered head and shedding tears ("Ευχεται δὲ διαπύρως εἰς τὸν παντοδύναμον Θεὸν ἡμέραν τε καὶ νύκτα σὺν γυναιξὶ καὶ τέκνοις, δακρυῤῥοοῦν καὶ ἄσκεπῇ τὴν κεφαλὴν ἔχον), that He may preserve the august person of His Majesty, our most magnanimous sovereign, on the throne of the Sultanate of eternal duration, in good health (ὕγιες) and through long years, and preserve the ministers of the Imperial Government, who are the intermediates of so great imperial kindness, in honour and glory under the gracious benevolence of His Imperial Majesty.

‘We pray Your Highness to deign to take cognizance of the present address, and to submit at the feet of the most august Sultan (καὶ ὑποβάλλῃ εἰς τοὺς πόδας τοῦ τρισεβάστου Σουλτάνου), that shadow of God (τῆς θείας ταυτῆς σκιᾶς), our perfect gratitude, and joy, and sincere thanks.’<sup>1</sup>

We hasten to conclude this chapter. Neither in Russia, nor in the Kingdom of Greece, nor in the Turkish Empire are the bishops of the Oriental Orthodox Church what, according to the doctrine of that Church, they ought to be. In none of her three chief branches do they really constitute the chief supreme authority; in the Kingdom of Greece their authority is considerably lessened and curtailed, and in the Russian Empire they scarcely constitute any authority whatever.

<sup>1</sup> Αθηνᾶ, No. 1986, June 27, 1853, pp. 3, 4: Εὐχαριστήριος τοῦ Οἰκουμενικοῦ Πατριάρχου καὶ τοῦ τῶν Ἱεροσολύμων πρὸς τὴν Ὀθωμανικὴν Κυβέρνησιν.

CHAPTER II.

THE ORIENTAL ORTHODOX CHURCH IS REALLY DIVIDED INTO SEVERAL SEPARATE AND INDEPENDENT CHURCHES AND EVEN PAPACIES, WHILST CATHOLICS ADMIT ONLY ONE CHURCH AND ONE POPE.

ONE of the most striking instances of the misunderstandings by which mainly religious discussions are perpetuated and increased, is afforded by the way in which the Catholic doctrine of a visible head of the Church is spoken of in the works of 'Orthodox' divines, and generally whenever Orthodox Russians or Greeks are treating of the Pope. As many Protestants, even in our day, hate Catholicism because, so they are told, Catholics pay divine worship to the blessed Virgin; assume that, provided one goes to confession, one can freely sin, obtain by money the remission of sins, &c. &c.; so also many Orthodox Russians and Greeks have no better reason for repudiating Catholicism than its 'monstrous' doctrine of a visible head of the Church, the Pope thus being an usurper of the authority of Jesus Christ, a simple man thus becoming invested with the attributes of God Himself, and the Church thus being made to be double-headed. Now as, in the first case, the Protestants we allude to do not hate a Catholicism really existing, but an imaginary Catholicism of their own; so, likewise, the Orthodox Russians and Greeks whom we have in view do not repudiate the true Catholic doctrine concerning the Pope, but a fancied Catholic doctrine, created, let us say, not by passion but by want of acquaintance with the fact, or by prejudice. Indeed, one cannot help smiling when listening to them, especially when they represent the doctrine of a visible head of the Church as destroying her unity. Of the innumerable instances which one might bring forward of such misconception of the true Catholic doctrine concerning the Pope, we confine ourselves to quoting the following:—‘Jesus Christ’ (so says the Archimandrite Makary, in his ‘Orthodox Doctrine of the Oriental Orthodox Church’)<sup>1</sup> ‘has promised that the Church shall last for ever (Matt. xvi. 18); moreover He has declared that He alone is the sole head of the Church (Eph. i. 22): but the Church is a body (Coloss. i. 18); consequently the Church will never fail, and will for ever have Jesus Christ as her head, inasmuch as she is united with Him, receives from Him spiritual life and being, and is by Him governed and justified. Can the Pope do this—the Pope, I say—that monarch of the Church, violator of the holy equality against the precept of Jesus Christ (Luke xii. 24), and usurper of the authority of Jesus Christ (2 Coloss. ii. 4)? Among us there are to be found in the Church only brothers, and not fathers.’<sup>2</sup>

How far the Pope deserves such epithets and qualifica-

<sup>1</sup> Церкви восточныя православное Учение. Спб. 1783. Ch. x. § 97, p. 114.

‘De tous les Essais de Théologie dogmatique que nous avons mentionnés jusqu’ici’ (says the other Makary, Bishop of Vinnitza), ‘ceux que l’on reconnaît à juste titre comme les meilleurs comparativement, au point de vue de la solidité et de la plénitude, ce sont ceux de l’Archimandrite Macaire (édit. 1783, 1790), de L. E. Irénée (Falkovsky) et Théophylacte (Gorsky).’ Théol. dogm. orth., trad. par un Russe (Paris, 1859), Introd. p. 76.

<sup>2</sup> Может ли сіе Папа учинить, Папа, говорю, монархъ онъ перковный, святаго равнодушія нарушитель, противу заповѣди Христовой. (Лук. 12, 24.) и похититель Христовой власти. (2 Col. 2, 4.) У насъ ничего въ Церкви кромѣ братій и отцевъ нѣтъ. (Церк. вост. прав. Учен. p. 114.

The passages of the Holy Scripture are only indicated by Makary, not quoted.

tions will appear from what is stated by the same author concerning the visibility of the Church. 'Jesus Christ alone' (so he says further on) 'is the Monarch of the Church, and she is His spiritual (duchovnoe) kingdom. Of the faithful, many of them have already attained their happiness in heaven, the others are preparing for it. Hence the Church is divided into Church triumphant and Church militant. Some of the militant Church walk in sanctity, but others show only the exterior appearance of Christianity. These form a visible Church, but the former form at the same time the VISIBLE and the INVISIBLE Church.'<sup>1</sup>—Accordingly, a portion of Jesus Christ's spiritual kingdom is formed by a visible Church. Now, to cause this Church to be governed by a single man rather than by a large number of men, each of them independent of the others—can this be deservedly termed a usurpation of the authority of JESUS CHRIST?<sup>2</sup> One might indeed speak of usurpation of the fellow-bishops' authority, but to represent the Pope as an usurper of Jesus Christ's authority in the Church, cannot be explained but by that extreme misconception of the Catholic doctrine concerning the Pope which we are just complaining of.

What is the Pope? The Pope is the visible head of the visible portion of the Church alluded to by the Archimandrite Makary. That the portion of the Church here on earth constitutes a visible society is clearly asserted in the Catechism of Mgr. Filaret, whose words on this subject perfectly agree with those of the 'Catechism of the Council of Trent.' 'The Church,' says Mgr. Filaret, 'though visible so far as she is upon earth, and contains all orthodox Christians living upon earth, still is at the same time invisible, so far as she is also partially in heaven, and contains all those that have departed hence in true faith and holiness.'<sup>1</sup> On the other hand, the Catechism of the Council of Trent, after mentioning the two parts of the Church, called the one 'the Church triumphant,' and the other 'the Church militant,' adds: 'We are not, however, hence to infer that there are two Churches, but there are two constituent parts of the same Church; one of which has gone before and is now in the possession of its heavenly country; the other following every day, until at length, united with our Saviour, it repose in endless felicity.'<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> СІИ ВИДИМУЮ, а тѢ ВМѢСТѢ и НЕВИДИМУЮ СОСТАВЛЯЮТЪ ЦЕРКОВЬ. Ibid. at the end : ДОГМАТЫ БОГОСЛОВСКІЕ, Nos. 76, 77, p. 139.

<sup>2</sup> It is well known that up to the definition of the Vatican Council on the 18th of July, 1870, the infallibility of the Pope was not obligatory on belief as an article of the Catholic faith, and its non-acceptance did not even prevent Catholics from becoming bishops. This divine prerogative of the successor of Peter could not consequently be seriously alluded to in 1783 by the Archimandrite Makary.

Now, since the Church on earth constitutes a visible society, she needs an external government and visible governors. Whatever the form of that government might be, the appellation itself of chief or head of the Church, applied to one single man, or to many men, cannot possibly be spared, as a special word must necessarily be made use of for designating the man or the men entrusted with the external government of the Church. But neither the Catholic nor the Oriental Orthodox Church has deemed it necessary to avoid as heretical the word chief or head of the Church when speaking of such men, and both agree in applying to them the denomination of head (or chief) of the Church. The Oriental Orthodox Church, professing to believe that the bishops are the common rulers of the Church, applies the forementioned denomination to them; <sup>1</sup> the Catholic Church, on the contrary, professing to believe that above the bishops there exists another divinely instituted authority commanding over them, and causing the Church to be constituted into a monarchy, specially applies the said denomination to that supreme authority, and calls the Pope the head of the Church. Yet to the Pope by the Catholic Church, just as little as to the bishops by the Oriental Orthodox Church, is such denomination applied in the same sense in which Jesus Christ is called head of the Church. The catechisms of the two Churches again marvellously agree in stating the different meaning which that denomination bears when applied to men and when applied to Jesus Christ.

<sup>1</sup> The Longer Catechism, part i. 'On the Ninth Article' in Blackmore's The Doctrine of the Russian Church, etc. p. 76.

<sup>2</sup> Catechismus Romanus ex decreto Concilii Tridentini, ed. Romæ, 1845, pars i. cap. x. 'De Nono Articulo' quæst. 6: 'Ecclesia militans et triumphans una est,' pp. 59-60.

‘We are taught,’ so reads the ‘Orthodox Confession of the Catholic and Apostolic Eastern Church,’ ‘that Christ is the only head of His Church, according as we are taught by the Apostle (Ephes. v. 23): “For the husband is the head of the wife, and Christ is the head of the Church; and He is the Saviour of the body.” And again (Colos. i. 18): “He is the head of the body of the Church, who is the beginning, and the first-born from the dead; that in all things He might have the pre-eminence.” However the rulers of the Church are called Heads (κεφαλαι) in their several Churches over which they are placed: but this is only as stewards and vicars (τοποτηρηται) of Christ in His several provinces over which they are said to be heads (κεφαλαι—глави).’ <sup>2</sup>

On the other hand, the ‘Catechism of the Council of

<sup>1</sup> See chap. i. p. 11 and note, ‘Episcopi qui nequaquam abusive sed verissime capitum instar suis præsunt Ecclesiis’ (οὐκ ἐν καταχρήσει ἀλλὰ κυρίως ἀρχὰς καὶ κεφαλὰς). Kimmel. Monum. fid.—Dosithei Confess. Decr. x. p. 437. In the Russian translation: ГЛАВН, НАЧАЛЬНИКИ.

<sup>2</sup> The Orthodox Confession, &c., in English (London, 1762), quest. 85, p. 82, 83. Kimmel, Monum. fidei, etc., Confessio Orthod. p. 158.

Trent,' after having said that 'The ruler and governor of the Church is one, the invisible one indeed, Christ, whom the Eternal Father hath made HEAD over all the Church, which is His body (Eph. i. 22, 23); but the visible one he who, as the legitimate successor of Peter, the Prince of the Apostles, occupies the See of Rome,'<sup>1</sup> thus proceeds to state in what sense the Pope is called the head (caput) of the Church: 'Quest. XIII. (part i. chap. x.): How, besides Christ, does the Church require one visible head? Ans. Should anyone object that the Church, content with one head and spouse, Jesus Christ, requires no other besides, the answer is at hand; for, as we have Christ the Lord, not only the author of every sacrament, but also their inward giver (præbitorem) (for He it is that baptizes and absolves, and yet He instituted men the external ministers of the sacraments), so has He placed over His Church, which He rules by His inward spirit, a man to be the VICAR (vicarium) and minister of His power; for, as a visible Church requires a visible head, so our Saviour appointed Peter head and pastor of the faithful of every sort, when, in the most ample terms, He committed to him His sheep to be fed, so that He wished His successor to have the very same power of ruling and governing the whole Church.'<sup>2</sup>

Consequently, since the 'Catechism of the Council of Trent,' in speaking of the single supreme visible head of the Catholic Church, designates him by the very same expression of Vicar of Jesus Christ used in the 'Orthodox Confession' for designating the many visible heads of the Oriental Orthodox Church—since the Pope, in the same 'Catechism of the Council of Trent,' is asserted to be only the visible MINISTER of the government of the Church, exactly as priests are the external ministers of the sacraments, Jesus Christ still being the inward giver of the sacraments and the inward ruler of the Church—in a word, since the Pope is called head of the Church in the ‘Catechism of the Council of Trent’ IN THE VERY SENSE in which the bishops are called heads of the Church in the ‘Orthodox Confession,’ we are entitled not to pay any further attention to the unqualified imputations that the Catholic doctrine respecting the Pope ‘destroys the unity (!) of the Church,’ that ‘the Pope is a usurper of the authority of JESUS CHRIST,’ and others of the same kind.

<sup>1</sup> Catechismus Rom. ex decr. Conc. Trident. ib. quæst. xi.: 'De notis veræ Ecclesiæ, et primo cur una dicatur,' p. 61.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid. quæst. xiii.: 'Quomodo præter Christum Ecclesia uno capite visibili indigeat,' p. 62.

The Catholic doctrine being thus cleared from misconceptions and mistakes, the question is solely of the number of those visible heads, who cannot possibly be spared in the visible portion of the Church; in other words, the question is one of the Church’s form of government. Now, whilst the unity of her external and visible organisation forms one of the chief features of the Catholic Church, in looking, on the contrary, at the Oriental Orthodox Church, we cannot help being struck by the separateness of her visible organisation and the want of unity in her external government. ‘Why is the Church one?’ it is asked in the Catechism of Mgr. Filaret, and the answer is, ‘Because she is one spiritual body, has one head, Christ, and is animated by one Spirit of God. There is one body and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all.’ (Eph. iv. 4, 6.)<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Blackmore, loc. cit. ‘On the Ninth Article,’ p. 77.

‘The Orthodox Confession’ (quest. 83) says:—‘The Church is one, holy, catholic, and apostolic, according to the doctrine of the Apostle (2 Cor. xi. 2): “I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present you as a chaste virgin unto Christ.” For like as Christ is only one, so his spouse also can

Thus far, the character of unity is equally claimed by every one of the innumerable sects brought forth by Protestantism. Each of them pretends to be a spiritual body, to have one head, Christ, and, above all, to be animated by one Spirit of God. We cannot possibly believe that the Fathers of the Council of Constantinople, when they pointed out the UNITY of the true Church as one of her four external characters or marks distinguishing her from every pretended Church whatever, did not attach to the word UNITY any more meaning than Mgr. Filaret does.

In spite of this the Orthodox Church positively rejects the doctrine that unity in the visible organisation of the Church is required in order to cause her to be one, and positively states that her UNITY is expressed outwardly by 'unity of creed, and by communion in prayer and sacraments.'<sup>1</sup>

A doctrine so analogous to that of Protestantism must necessarily lead to consequences very analogous to those of Protestantism. As Protestants—after having rejected the visible head divinely appointed to the Church by Jesus Christ—in order to exist, could not help calling be but one; as is manifest from the Epistle to the Ephesians (iv. 5), "One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all."

In other words: the Church is one because she is one. An inquirer after the one Church of Jesus Christ is no further advanced by such explanations than before.

<sup>1</sup> Q. How does it agree with the unity of the Church that there are many separate and independent Churches, as those of Jerusalem, Antioch, Alexandria, Constantinople, and Russia?

A. These are particular Churches, or parts of the one Catholic Church; the separateness of their visible organisation does not hinder them from being all spiritually great members of the one body of the universal Church, from having one head, Christ, and one spirit of faith and grace. This unity is expressed outwardly by unity of creed, and by communion in prayers and sacraments.

Blackmore, ibid.

others to be visible heads over them instead of the Pope, and either submitted to kings and queens, or, getting rid of their authority and passing through manifold revolutions, experienced the greatest variety of governors and governments, the Oriental Orthodox Church also, whilst rejecting, as contrary to the precepts of Jesus Christ, the authority of the Pope of Rome, has, in fact, never existed without some other Popes;—moreover, in the stead of bishops, kings and queens have ruled over her like Popes—and revolutions and a variety of governors and governments have equally formed, and still constantly form, the history of the Oriental Orthodox Church. Let us look attentively into such a fact, as, putting aside the arguments taken from Holy Scripture and tradition, we propose to confine ourselves to it, in order to deduce from it alone a special evidence of the divinely instituted authority of the Pope. In this chapter we shall treat of the Popes of the Orthodox Church, as we shall speak in the next of her revolutions and variety of governments.

The Oriental Orthodox Church, we have said, had never existed without some Popes. By Pope, we mean here the visible, supreme, and independent head of some special branch of the Oriental Orthodox Church, commanding not only the faithful (lambs) but also their pastors the bishops (sheep),<sup>1</sup> and exercising jurisdiction over all of them, without being commanded by them. The Pope of Rome, with regard to the government of the Church, is all this, and nothing else than this. We say: ‘with regard to the government of the Church’—as it is only the government of the Church we are concerned with—and in order to prevent misunderstandings, we add here some few words concerning the different powers of the Pope.

<sup>1</sup> ‘Feed my lambs,’ said Jesus to Peter; ‘feed my sheep.’—John xxi. 15–17.

In the Pope (of Rome) must be distinguished three powers, the doctrinal power, the power of order, and, finally, the power of jurisdiction. The doctrinal power is that by which the Pope is constituted, according to the expression of the Council of Florence, 'TEACHER OF ALL CHRISTIANS.' 'Infallibility' is attached to the Pope whenever (and only when) he exercises this power under conditions constituting a definition ex cathedrâ.—The power of order is that which the Pope holds by virtue of the EPISCOPAL CONSECRATION. This power entitles him to consecrate priests and bishops, and to be the ordinary minister of the sacrament of confirmation.—Finally, the power of jurisdiction is that by virtue of which the Pope is entrusted with the GOVERNMENT properly so called of the Church, that is, with the supreme legislative and administrative power over her. Other bishops may indeed have been called by God to share in the government of the Church, the Pope being just as much unable to administer by himself the whole Church as a king is unable to administer, alone and without aid from other men, his particular kingdom. Yet this participation of the bishops in the government of the Church no more prevents the Pope from being their chief, than the unavoidable assistance of local governors in the separate provinces of a State prevents a king from being really their king.

Now, of these three powers, the only one which is here in question is the last, that is, the Pope's power of jurisdiction over the universal Church. The doctrine we have in view is only that which has hitherto been the chief obstacle in the way of the reunion of the two Churches, and we shall indeed be happy if, supposing the recent decree of 'infallibility' to constitute a new one, we may by this book help toward reducing all causes of division to the infallibility of the Pope. Let us, therefore, be faithful to our programme, and not engage in any controversy which does not concern the Pope's power of jurisdiction over the universal Church.

We must, however, dwell a little on the Pope's power of order, as a great confusion of ideas generally prevails on this subject. The power of order we have already defined as that which the Pope holds in virtue of the episcopal consecration, and which enables him to consecrate priests and bishops, and to be the ordinary minister of the sacrament of confirmation. With regard to this power, the Pope is on a level with the last bishop in partibus, and the last bishop in partibus, if elected Pope, has not in the least increased his power of order. Moreover, the power of order is essentially distinct and separate from the power of jurisdiction. The above bishops in partibus whom we have just named have the first, without possessing the second. Many apostolic vicars in mission countries are invested with the second without possessing the first, as, without being bishops, they exercise in their mission a real jurisdiction like that of bishops. Again, the power of order is so separate even from the power of jurisdiction over the universal Church, that one might, for a while, be invested with the latter without being necessarily a bishop. Let us only suppose the case that, on the death of a Pope, the cardinals present at Rome, and invested, ad interim, with the power of governing the Catholic Church, be all either deacons or priests and none of them bishops. In that case the jurisdiction over the universal Church, during the vacancy of the Holy See, would be exercised by men who do not even possess the power of episcopal order, and who, besides, do not exercise the said jurisdiction (which is extended also over bishops of whatever rank) because they are priests or deacons, but because they are cardinals. Finally, even a layman, if elected Pope, is immediately, on his acceptance of the dignity, invested with the power of full jurisdiction over the whole Catholic Church, and enters at once upon the exercise of it, without needing for it the episcopal consecration, which is only subsequently conferred.

One could hardly find, we believe, a better instance of the practical difference and separateness of the two powers of order and jurisdiction. What makes the Pope to be the visible head of the Church is not his power of order (on account of which, let it be remarked again, he is on a level with the last bishop in partibus), but his power of jurisdiction. The ‘Tradition of the Syriac Church of Antioch,’ which we here beg to point out to our readers as well worthy public attention, affords us, on that point, passages in which the said difference between the two powers and the special prerogative of Peter are so clearly asserted and explained, that we cannot help quoting two of them. ‘In the imposition of hands,’ so runs the first, ‘in the invocation of the Holy Ghost, and in other episcopal offices, patriarchs, metropolitans, and bishops are all equal, as Peter and the Apostles, his associates, did all equally partake of the gifts of the Holy Ghost and of the priestly order. For government, however, Peter (alone) was appointed head of his colleagues. (John Bar-Wahbun, in “Expos. Sacram.” cap. 29, art. 15.)’ ‘The disciples,’ so reads the second passage, ‘were all Apostles; each of them had received the imposition of hands from our Redeemer, all of them were made bishops; but, for the sake of the government, Simon was appointed chief.’<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> The Tradition of the Syriac Church of Antioch, concerning the primacy and the prerogatives of St. Peter, and of his successors the Roman Pontiffs, by the most Rev. Cyril Behnam Benni, Syriac Archbishop of Mossul (Nineveh), translated, under the direction of the author, by the Rev. Jos. Gagliardi (London: Burns, Oates & Co., 1871), Nos. lxxiv. lv. p. 57.

From this work, which, because of the new and striking evidence it contains in favour of the Popes’ primacy and prerogatives, is so well adapted to strengthen the faith of Catholics, we will add here the following passage:—

We ask the reader not to lose sight of the distinction between the Pope's two powers of order and jurisdiction, as it is only by getting a clear conception of this distinction that he will be enabled to understand and discuss the matter which we are dealing with in this chapter. We proceed now to speak of the several Popes dividing among themselves the government of the Oriental Orthodox Church.

FIRST OF ALL, what, we ask our readers, are the Tsar of Russia and the King of Greece, if we listen to the documents discussed above and to the declaration of the Greek bishops assembled at Nauplia on the 15th (27th) of July, 1833? Does the Catholic Church acknowledge in the Pope of Rome a more extended power of jurisdiction than that conferred upon the said Sovereigns by the Russian and Hellenic Churches? However paradoxical such a question might appear, some reflections will lead the reader to conclude that the answer is by no means so obvious as at first sight he may have believed.

'The Tsar,' so we are told in Platon's Catechism, 'has nobody on earth higher than himself, and is not subject to any human law.' Where, then, are to be found the limits to the extent of his jurisdiction over the Church? Is it in the ecclesiastical canons? We have already examined this question (pp. 56-62). Let it be so with regard to the dogmatical canons of the Russian Church (the Pope also 'Christ Himself (so runs this testimony) did not confer the high priesthood upon the virgin John, full of zeal though he was besides, but on the married Simon, who had also experienced weakness by denying him (xlvi. p. 45).' Accordingly, on Peter was conferred a high priesthood not conferred upon John, though this latter was not only an Apostle like Peter, but of all the Apostles was the happiest—the happiest one, 'whom Jesus loved' (John xiii. 23, xx. 2, xxi. 20, xix. 27); who during the last supper 'was leaning on Jesus' bosom' (John xiii. 23, xxi. 20); and who, still lying on Jesus' breast, had then dared to say unto him, 'Who is it?' (John xiii. 25.)

being bound by the dogmatical canons of the Catholic Church), but as to the disciplinary ones, the documents which we have discussed in the first chapter of this book, and the most cursory inspection of the Laws of the Russian Empire, must convince everyone that the Russian Tsars never considered themselves bound by the disciplinary canons of their Church. And in doing so, not only were they consistent with the doctrine virtually contained in the Russian Catechisms (see above, pp. 90–2), but they were also fulfilling a duty logically resting upon them. In fact, the disciplinary canons of the Church are, by their own nature, liable to be suppressed or modified according to circumstances of time and place, and whenever such changes and suppressions are required for the welfare of the Church, the supreme authority is not only entitled but even bound to effect them. Now, since the Tsars must ‘seek what is the best for their people both in spiritual and temporal things,’ and since they depend on no one on earth, but are rather charged by God to ‘overlook the pastors of the Church in the discharge of their duties,’ whenever conscience suggests to a Tsar that some canonical prescriptions have become no longer good either for the Church or for the State, or that the episcopal jurisdiction ought to be restrained, or that modifications are to be brought into the legislature concerning the impediments to marriage, how could he refuse to obey his conscience? and where on earth is to be found the authority by which he should be prevented from bringing about whatever he may deem to be best for the Church? Accordingly, the power of the Tsar over the disciplinary canons of his Church follows as a natural and necessary conclusion from the mission with which the Russian Catechisms assert that he has been entrusted by God.

But, if not by the disciplinary canons of his Church, by what else can a Tsar's jurisdiction over her ever be limited and restrained? The answer is at hand in Platon's Catechism, and we have already quoted it: 'Who can bind the conscience EXCEPT GOD, the searcher of hearts and trier of the reins? And more particularly is it of peculiar advantage for a Sovereign to be under the influence of a holy faith; because he, although subject to no human laws, is thereby made subject to the law of faith, and is thus preserved within the bounds of holy justice.'<sup>1</sup> After this how could we be deservedly taxed with exaggeration in stating that the Tsar had no more limits to his power of jurisdiction over his Church than the Pope has? Let us listen again to an author already quoted by us, as one having a great aversion to exaggeration: 'Pour ce qui est des fonctions extérieures du gouvernement de l'Église,'<sup>2</sup> says Schnitzler, 'l'empereur les exerce avec un pouvoir beaucoup plus étendu que celui du pape. Il nomme à toutes les places, et ne s'est imposé qu'une restriction toute volontaire en permettant au Saint Synode et aux évêques de lui présenter des candidats; il a également le droit (indirectement exercé) de déplacer ou même de destituer tel prêtre qu'il juge indigne de ses fonctions. Cependant il ne s'est jamais arrogé celui de décider en matière de foi. Son influence est grande, prépondérante même, en toutes choses, mais il est moins le chef de l'Église que son organe supérieur, son protecteur né, son tuteur si l'on veut; dans tous les cas il n'en est que le chef séculier. S'il s'agissait d'être juge dans un débat sur des matières de doctrine, l'empereur renverrait l'affaire au Saint Synode ou réunirait un Synode spécial, et dans un cas majeur il enverrait prendre l'avis des quatre patriarches d'Orient. Il ne se réserverait à lui-même,

<sup>1</sup> Platon's Catechism, translated by Pinkerton, 'The Present State of the Greek Church,' p. 171. See above, p. 89.

<sup>2</sup> The power of jurisdiction could hardly be better defined than by Schnitzler's words: 'external functions of the government of the Church.'

directement que l'exécution de la décision rendue, de la sentence prononcée.'<sup>1</sup> We have preferred to quote this passage in extenso, as what Schnitzler says in order to attenuate the effect made on the reader by his having previously likened the power of the Tsar to that of the Pope, <sup>1</sup> Les Institutions de la Russie, depuis les réformes d'Alex. II. (Paris, 1866), t. ii. p. 66. Schnitzler, on this point, refers the reader to Tourgeneff's (Nic.) work, La Russie et les Russes (Paris, 1847), tom. ii. p. 280. The illustrious Russian writer who had so glorious a part in causing the emancipation of the Russian serfs to become finally a fact, did not bring to the discussion of this point the same amount of doctrine and thorough acquaintance with the matter as distinguishes other parts of his work. He states that: 'Aucun autre titre (que celui de protecteurs ou défenseurs de l'Église) n'a été jamais donné officiellement aux Tsars, et moins que tout autre celui de chef de l'Église, qu'on ne voit pas d'ailleurs qu'ils aient jamais pris.' (p. 286). The reader knows that the Tsar is officially termed 'Head of the Church,' in Paul I.'s Act of Succession, and in explaining this title, we merely quoted Paul I.'s ukase of November 3, 1798, and the Russian Code of Laws. (See above, pp. 78-81, and note p. 91.) But what we were more painfully struck by, is Tourgeneff's misconception of the Catholic doctrine concerning the Pope. After having said, 'L'Empereur de Russie est un souverain complètement absolu; sa puissance embrasse tout, la vie civile du peuple comme sa vie religieuse; il commande à tout, il règle tout; il permet, il défend, il ordonne,' he adds, 'Mais le fait ne prouve pas le principe; or, en principe, le peuple russe, le clergé russe, ne reconnaissent et n'ont jamais reconnu d'autre chef de l'Église que Jésus-Christ. . . .' And further on, 'En effet, d'où pourrait-elle naître cette doctrine de tant de gravité, qui investirait un homme des attributs de Dieu même?' (pp. 281-3).

What doctrine does the illustrious writer mean? The above-quoted abstracts of the Catechism of the Council of Trent compared with those of the Orthodox Confession and Filaret's Catechism, would certainly have prevented him if he had only made the same comparison, from expressing himself on the matter as he did. Nay, the Russian Church did always declare and profess in her Catechisms, and on every occasion, that the only head of the Church is Jesus Christ; but at the same time she did always declare and profess that the VISIBLE portion of the Church, the MILITANT Church on earth, wants an external government.—Now this external government must be necessarily entrusted to some human being, vicar of the invisible Jesus Christ, and minister of His power (see above, p. 191). In the Catholic Church this 'human being' is the Pope with the bishops under him; in the 'Expositions of the Orthodox Faith' the bishops; in the Russian Empire, with the consent of the Russian Church, the Tsar and the bishops UNDER HIM.

cannot but confirm the correctness of his statement, and the thesis we have undertaken to prove. In fact, the doctrinal power of the Pope, viz., his ‘droit de décider en matière de foi,’ is not in question here; as even the recent definition of the Pope’s infallibility did not add anything to his previous ‘full power of JURISDICTION over the universal Church.’ What Schnitzler remarks—that, at any rate, the Tsar is only the secular head of his Church—shows that this writer, too, did not pay sufficient attention to the distinction between the power of order and the power of jurisdiction. The Pope is called, and is, ‘Pope,’ because of the latter, and not because of the former, in respect of which, let it be repeated again, he is on a level with the last bishop in partibus. Finally, as to the Tsar’s deference to the Oriental patriarchs, to which Schnitzler alludes, see what we have said in Chapter I. pp. 33–38. Accordingly the Tsar’s jurisdiction over his Church has the same limits as the jurisdiction of the Pope, of which last we shall speak again further on. Depending only on God, having nobody on earth higher than himself, being subject to no human law, the Tsar is preserved only by faith within the bounds of holy justice. Yet, whilst the man acknowledged by Catholics as entrusted with the power of ruling the Church independently of everyone but God, is enabled to discharge the formidable duties of ‘head of the Church,’ by the special graces attached to the episcopal consecration, the same power is conferred in the Russian Orthodox Church on whomsoever happens to obtain the throne of Russia—even on women, even on such as publicly protect, honour, and encourage the leaders of impiety and incredulity. It was, perhaps, the feeling of the terrible responsibility resting on the Tsars, which led the Russian Orthodox Church to create a kind of eighth sacrament in favour of the Tsar, by pronouncing ‘ana- thema' against those who 'think that Orthodox Sovereigns are not raised to their throne by a special good pleasure of God concerning them, and that at the unction the gifts of the Holy Ghost are not poured out upon them, in order to the fulfilment of this great vocation, and who, in consequence, dare to rebel,' etc. (See Chap I. pp. 102–103).

What the Tsar is in Russia, the King of Greece was unanimously proclaimed by all his bishops to be in his kingdom. 'The Eastern Orthodox Apostolic Church of the Kingdom of Greece (it is said in the proclamation of the independence of the Hellenic Church), which spiritually (ἐν Πνεύματι) does not recognise any other head but the founder (θεμελιωτὴν) of the Christian faith — our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ—as regards the government of the Church has for her chief (ἀρχηγόν) the King of Greece.'<sup>1</sup>—Indeed, one is tempted to believe that the Greek bishops assembled at Nauplia on the 15th (27th) July, 1833, when being about to write down their declaration, afterwards inserted in the 'Royal Proclamation' of July 23rd, 1833, had beforehand caused to be read in their presence the above-quoted (p. 121) lines of the 'Catechism of the Council of Trent': 'Jesus Christ has placed over His Church, which He rules by His inward Spirit, a man to be the vicar and minister of His power, for (as) a visible Church requires a visible head, &c. . . .' Let it only, instead of 'Eastern . . Church of the Kingdom of Greece,' be said, 'Catholic or Universal Church,' and instead of 'The King of Greece,' be said, 'The Successor of Peter,' and the first article of the said 'Proclamation' would express THE PURE CATHOLIC DOCTRINE CONCERNING THE GOVERNMENT OF THE CHURCH. Accordingly, the King of Greece is, with respect to the government of the Hellenic Church, her visible head.

<sup>1</sup> Ἐν Πνεύματι μὴ ἀναγνωρίζουσα ἄλλην κεφαλὴν παρὰ τὸν Θεμελιωτὴν τῆς χριστιανικῆς πίστεως τὸν Κύριον καὶ Σωτῆρα ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν, κατὰ δὲ τὸ διοικητικὸν μέρος ἔχουσα ἀρχηγὸν τὸν βασιλέα τῆς Ἑλλάδος... (Διακήρυξις περὶ τῆς ἀνεξαρτησίας τῆς Ἑλληνικῆς Ἐκκλησίας. See above, pp. 109–111.

Where, then, are to be found the limits to the exercise of his jurisdiction? He also is bound by the dogmatical canons of his Church (just in the same way, let us repeat, as the Pope is by the dogmatical canons of the Catholic Church); but with regard to the disciplinary canons, we may apply to the King of Greece whatever we have just advanced in reference to the Tsar. To be chief of the Church is to depend on no being on earth, but on God, and to be entrusted by God with the care of ordaining what one deems to be best for the Church. Therefore, whenever the Hellenic King's conscience causes him to judge some canons to be of no use, and their abrogation or derogation to be required for the welfare of the Church, nobody on earth can prevent him from acting according to his conscience. The King's personal character may indeed make him accessible to advice; but only let a man like Peter the Great ascend the throne of Greece, and none can foresee to what extent he would consent to have himself bound by ancient laws enacted in the first centuries of the Church, when society presented an aspect so different from its modern one. Men like Peter the Great are not conservative, and the respect for antiquity and the practical wisdom of our ancestors in faith, is not likely to form a characteristic feature of anyone who would strive to imitate that Russian Tsar.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Some Greeks may object that the Acts of July 1833 were corrected by the Συνόδικος Τόμος of the Church of Constantinople (see further on p. 150 et seq.), and the Νόμος καταστατικὸς τῆς Ἱερᾶς Συνόδου τῆς Ἐκκλησίας τῆς Ἑλλάδος (see above, pp. 110–111) of 1852. But as that Concordat with the Church of Constantinople has never been honestly carried into execution, we need not here discuss its value. The Συνόδικος Τόμος recognised the independence (αὐτοκεφαλία) of the Hellenic Church, but on the condition

Here we are met by an objection. Above the Tsar and the King of Greece, we are told, there exists an authority admitted by both of them as being superior to them, and as having the power of enacting even disciplinary canons binding them: there exists still above them an Œcumenical Council, whilst the Pope is asserted to be higher than that Council itself. A few words will show the real weight of such an objection. First of all, who in the Oriental Orthodox Church has the power of assembling an Œcumenical Council? The way in which Orthodox divines speak of the convocation of the seven General Councils admitted by their Church, clearly and plainly shows that this power is not acknowledged as appertaining to any particular bishop, of whatever rank. Still in consequence of having lost the dogma that the ecclesiastical power is quite independent of the civil, the Oriental Orthodox Church shows herself quite unable to answer, in a satisfactory way, this elementary question. We have already, after the very words of Filaret's Catechism, likened the Oriental Orthodox Church to a confederation of separate independent States, which all agree in not acknowledging any authority entitled to enact laws to bind them all, except a Congress or Diet of the representatives of the different States. Yet the Oriental Orthodox Church finds herself in a still worse condition than such a confederation. In fact, in the statutes of any such political confederation of independent States, the question is constantly foreseen that the Synod of Athens 'is to govern her according to the divine and sacred canons, freely and without hindrance from any secular interference' . . . . γνωρίζουσα Σύνοδον . . . . διοικούσαν τὰ τῆς ἐκκλησίας κατὰ τοὺς θελοῦς καὶ ἱεροὺς κανόνας ἐλευθέρως καὶ ἀκωλύτως ἀπὸ πάσης κοσμικῆς ἐπεμβάσεως. Οὕτω δὲ καὶ ἐπὶ τούτοις καθισταμένην διὰ τοῦ παρόντος Συνοδικοῦ Τόμου τὴν ἱερὰν ἐν Ἑλλάδι Σύνοδον, ἐπιγινώσκομεν αὐτὴν, etc. ('Ο Συνόδικος Τόμος, in the Greek newspaper the 'Ἀθηνᾶ,' No. 1707, August 14, 1850, p. 2. These words, in the mouth of a Patriarch of Constantinople, are well worthy of consideration.

and resolved, to whom it appertains authoritatively to assemble the said Congress or Diet; whilst in the 'Catechisms' and 'Expositions of Faith' of the Oriental Orthodox Church the question is still pending, and will, very likely, remain pending for ever. A recent most striking instance of the correctness of our statement is afforded by the convocation, on the part of the Œcumenical Patriarch of Constantinople, of an Œcumenical Council of the Oriental Orthodox Church for settling the question concerning the independence of the Bulgarian Church. The Holy Synod of St. Petersburg (instead of the Russian bishops) answered that, though it regretted the Sultan's interference in this affair, it deemed the assembling of an Œcumenical Council to be unnecessary. A good encouraging example, which any one of the separate independent Churches composing the Oriental Orthodox Church will not, at the proper opportunity, fail to imitate!

Moreover, if we listen to some expressions of the Greek-Russian liturgy, of the Orthodox Divines, and, above all, of the Encyclical Letter of the Oriental Patriarchs (May 6, 1848) in answer to that of Pius IX. (Jan. 6, 1848), and addressed to all the Orthodox, the number of the Œcumenical Councils is fixed for ever. The seven Œcumenical Councils, admitted by the Oriental Orthodox Church, are likened to the seven pillars supporting the House of Wisdom (Prov. ix. 1), and to the seven seals of the Holy Ghost (Apoc. v. 1).<sup>1</sup> Now, as neither the number of the said pillars, nor that of the seven seals sealing the mystical book spoken of in the Revelation of St. John, is likely to be increased, it would appear that no other Œcumenical Council of the Oriental Orthodox Church is ever to be held in future.—Yet what, above all, shows plainly how little the Tsar of Russia and the King of Greece have to fear from any Œcumenical Council, is the circumstance that no Council whatever can be held without their consent. Let us suppose that not only the Œcumenical Patriarch of Constantinople, but also those of Antioch, Alexandria, and Jerusalem urge with great earnestness the convocation of an Œcumenical Council; let us even suppose that the bishops of the Kingdom of Greece and of the Russian Empire are willing to attend it, the veto of the Sovereign who, listening to his conscience, deems it to be of no use, but rather pernicious to the Church, will still be sufficient to prevent their pious desire from being carried out. The Oriental Patriarchs have no jurisdiction whatever either in Russia or in Greece, and their wishes or will in disciplinary matters have no claim whatever to be listened to when in collision with the will of the Sovereigns of the two countries.

<sup>1</sup> 'Cette piété filiale envers notre mère commune (l'Église) est la source de notre obéissance à la vérité et à la doctrine marquée des sept sceaux de l'Esprit (Apoc. v. 1), c'est-à-dire, les sept Conciles œcuméniques. . . . Les vénérables Conciles œcuméniques, ces sept colonnes de la maison de la Sagesse, ont pris naissance dans notre foi et dans nos pays.'—Lettre encycl. de S.S. Pie IX, et Encyclique responsive des Patriarches et des Synodes de l'Église d'Orient (Paris, 1850), Enc. resp. § 16, p. 56, and § 21, p. 63.

See also Macaire, Théol. dogm. orthod., Introd. pp. 17, 18, note.

Finally, let us remark again that the disciplinary canons are by their own nature liable to be suppressed or modified according to circumstances of time and place, and whenever such changes or suppressions are required for the welfare of the Church, the supreme authority is not only entitled, but even bound, to effect them. The application which Orthodox Sovereigns have in time past made and which they still make of this principle in dealing with the existing canons of THE SEVEN ŒCUMENICAL COUNCILS admitted by them,<sup>1</sup> is the surest pledge of the similar line of conduct they would follow with regard to any future disciplinary canons of future Œcumenical Councils of the Oriental Orthodox Church.

<sup>1</sup> With how great earnestness, for example, do the canons of the Œcumenical Councils, confirming the prescription of the thirty-seventh canon of the Apostles, urge the convocation of Provincial Councils twice, or, at least,

We must now pass to the Oriental Orthodox Church of the Turkish Empire. Here, at least, we are happy to say that the heads of the Church of whom we are going to speak, are not kings or queens; they are bishops. Though, being aware of the influence exercised by the Sultan in the affairs of the Greek Orthodox Church of his empire, and of the right conferred by her upon him of settling disputes which the authority of the Patriarch of Constantinople is not able to end,<sup>1</sup> we prefer not to lay much stress upon this point, and will rather suppose that the Sultan does not even exist.

The four Patriarchates of Constantinople, Alexandria, Antioch, and Jerusalem constitute four separate and independent Churches, each of them under the authority of his own patriarch.<sup>2</sup> We dare not say that to the four Oriental Patriarchs may be fairly applied whatever we have just stated concerning the extent of the jurisdiction of the Tsar and of the King of Greece in ecclesiastical matters. First of all, the Patriarch of Constantinople being once a year! Are those canons listened to? See the first Œcum. Council (of Nicæa) can. 5; second (of Constant.) can. 2; fourth (of Chalcedon) can. 19; sixth (of Constant. in Trullo) can. 8.

<sup>1</sup> See Chap. I. pp. 112, 113.

<sup>2</sup> Q. What hierarchical authority is there which can extend its sphere of action over the whole Catholic Church?

A. An Œcumenical Council.

Q. Under what hierarchical authority are the chief divisions of the Catholic Church?

A. Under the most holy Patriarchs, and the most holy Synod.

Catech. of Mgr. Filaret, part i. 'On the Ninth Article.' Blackmore, p. 83.

See also the question quoted above, p. 123, note.—Q. How does it agree with the unity of the Church that there are many separate and independent Churches, as those of Jerusalem, etc.?

at the same time the civil chief of all the Greek subjects of the Sultan, his influence must necessarily be felt, in ecclesiastical matters also, by the three Patriarchs of Alexandria, Antioch, and Jerusalem. It would be little advisable for them to do anything in open contradiction to the ecclesiastical canons, as this would assuredly give the Patriarch of Constantinople a pretext for urging on the Government to depose them, as perturbators of the national religion.<sup>1</sup> Moreover, even as to the Patriarch of Constantinople himself, there are many restraints laid upon him also by the very circumstance of his being at once the Patriarch of the new Rome, and the representative to the Government of a special nationality distinguished only by the religious belief of those who belong to it.<sup>2</sup> Finally, considering the concurrence of the patriarchal Synods (composed of bishops) in the administration of the general affairs of the patriarchate, and, to some extent, even the rights conferred, in certain cases, upon simple bishops, we freely grant that we are not entitled to call them Popes, or supreme independent heads, each in his own patriarchate.

<sup>1</sup> See M*** d'Ohsson, Tableau général de l'empire ottoman (Paris, 1824). 'Berat, ou Diplôme d'investiture d'un patriarche grec de Constantinople,' tom. v. p. 120.

<sup>2</sup> It is well known that when the Turks took possession of Constantinople in 1453, the conquered nation was offered the alternative of conversion to Islamism with the rights of citizenship and all the privileges of 'true believers,' or of retaining their own religion and civil rights upon condition of becoming tributary, and therefore inferior to their conquerors in political and social position. The various populations then composing the Byzantine Empire formed in consequence different separate communities; and the same diversities of language, of manners, and of religion still continue to distinguish them from the people with whom they are incorporated. The Greeks, the Armenians (divided into United Armenians and independent Armenians), and the Jews, compose four communities, designated by the name of Milleti erbea, and represented to the Government by their religious chiefs.

See Ubieini, Letters on Turkey, transl. by Lady Easthope (London, 1856); Madden, The Turkish Empire (London, 1862); etc.

Yet, treating them as constituting together a sort of Oligarchy, and even admitting that they may naturally be repelled by what seems to them the prodigious development of the Roman papacy, we must still remark that they cannot avoid the necessity of choosing between one development and another; if they will not have the Pope of Rome, they must have, or be liable at any time to have, the lay-popes of Russia and of Greece, and even among themselves they have, in their own way, gone even further than Rome has ever gone in setting the patriarchate above the episcopate. The Popes have never been reconsecrated when bishops before their election to the papacy, but when a fifth patriarchal chair was erected at Moscow, Jeremiah, Patriarch of Constantinople (1589), and after him also Theophane, Patriarch of Jerusalem (1619), themselves, with their own hands, in spite of the 68th Canon of the Apostles, reconsecrated a second time those who were raised to it.<sup>1</sup> ‘There needed a double grace to be Patriarch,’ remark, on that point, after the documents of the time, A. N. Mouravieff and Mgr. Filaret, Archbishop of Tchernigoff,<sup>2</sup> both forgetting whilst

<sup>1</sup> See Mouravieff, Ист. Росс. Церк. Спб. 1840, pp. 175, 235, 409, and its English translation, by the Rev. R. W. Blackmore (Oxford, 1842), pp. 129, 176, 308.—Mouravieff, Сношенія Россіи съ Востокомъ по дѣламъ церковнымъ. Спб. 1858, tom. i. pp. 210, 342.—Zampelios (Spiridion), Καθίδρυσις Πατριάρχου ἐν Ῥωσσίᾳ (Athens, 1859), p. 19.—Кормчая Книга (ed. 1816), p. 18 verso et seq. etc.

Of the ten Patriarchs of Moscow (1589–1700), four were twice consecrated bishops; the first Patriarch, Job, even three times. The fact is stated by the Patriarch Nikon himself (1653–1667), in his Replies of the humble Nikon, by the mercy of God Patriarch, against the Questions of the Boyar Simeon Streshneff, and the Answers of the Metropolitan of Gaza, Paisius Ligaridis, pp. 14, 15. This precious manuscript was translated from the Russian, and lately published (London: Trübner & Co.) by W. Palmer, M.A., of Magdalen College (Oxford), author of Dissertations on Subjects relating to the ‘Orthodox’ or ‘Eastern’ Catholic Communion (London, 1853).

<sup>2</sup> Сугубая благодать нужна была высшему пастырю

writing, that, according to the doctrine of their own Church, the sacrament of order, like the sacrament of baptism, cannot be conferred a second time.<sup>1</sup>

Let us also add that their Oligarchy, taken as a whole, constitutes a true separate and supreme government, far less dependent, if possible, on the Churches of Russia and Greece than these have shown themselves to be with regard to the four patriarchates. Again, we need hardly remark, when we think of what has actually occurred, that the Greek Church of the Turkish Empire is by no means secured at any moment from seeing one or other of her Patriarchs transgress the limits of his power, and either by getting rid of that limited authority over him, which in certain cases is allowed to his fellow-patriarchs, or by dealing with them as their chief, become a real Pope. The language of the Patriarch of Constantinople (and naturally, as he is the first) often resembles that of the Pope of Rome. For instance, he professes to have

Церкви. Mouravieff, p. 175 (Blackmore p. 129).—Filaret, Ист. русс. церкви, пер. iv. p. 9.

<sup>1</sup> Ἐντίθῃσι δὲ τὸ βάπτισμα καὶ χαρακτῆρα ἀνεξάλειπτον, ὥσπερ καὶ ἡ ἱερωσύνη. Καθὼς γὰρ ἀδύνατον, τὸν αὐτὸν δις ἱερωσύνης τυχεῖν τῆς αὐτῆς οὕτως ἀδύνατον ἀναβαπτισθῆναι, etc.—Kimmel, Monum. fid. Eccl. Orient.—Dosithei Confessio (or Letter of the Patriarchs of the East on the Orthodox Faith) decr. xvi. p. 456. See also Macaire, Théologie dogmatique orthodoxe, tom. ii. part v. § 240: 'Côté visible du sacrement de l'ordre, ses effets invisibles et sa non-répétition,' p. 590.

It is worthy of remark that both Russian and Greek writers take care to prevent us from even supposing that the reconsecration to which we allude was not a real consecration. 'The whole order for the consecration of a bishop,' they say, 'was repeated over the elected Patriarch' (Mouravieff, ll. cit.)—'without any change' (ἄνευ οὐδεμιᾶς καινοτομίας), adds Zampelios (Spirdion) loc. cit.

After this, one might perhaps say, in order to excuse the Oriental Orthodox Church, that the reconsecrations of the Patriarchs of Moscow have all preceded the Synod of Jerusalem of 1672, in which the 'Letter of the Patriarchs of the East on the Orthodox faith' was drawn up. But has not, then, the Oriental Orthodox Church created a new dogma in 1672?

been entrusted by God with 'the care of all the Churches.'<sup>1</sup> The extent of this care, and the way of practically showing solicitude for the welfare of all the Churches, is a matter only of personal appreciation and of circumstance.

We go on now to the conclusion which follows from what we have been saying.

In Chapter I. we have stated that nowhere in the Oriental Orthodox Church of Russia, Greece, and the Turkish Empire do the bishops constitute the supreme authority in the Church. Here we state, after what we have hitherto proved, that the Oriental Orthodox Church is really divided into several separate and independent Churches, and even Papacies. But if so, the real difference between the Oriental Orthodox and the Catholic Churches as to the government, properly so called, of the Church, is practically reduced, as we have undertaken to prove, to a difference in the number of her independent visible heads, vicars of Christ—in other words, of her Popes. Whilst the Catholic Church admits only one of them, the Oriental Orthodox Church assumes that they may be several; whilst the Catholic Church is still constant in acknowledging the supreme power of JURISDICTION to be in the Bishop of Rome, the Oriental Orthodox Church confers it according to circumstances—at one time on single bishops—at another time on patriarchs—at a third on kings and queens; finally, whilst the Catholic Church is constituted into a single Papacy, the Oriental Orthodox Church is constituted into a number of separate and independent Papacies.

<sup>1</sup> . . . 'Ἡμεῖς οἱ ἐλέφ Θεοῦ τὴν ἀποστολικὴν μέριμναν ΠΑΣΩΝ τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν ἀναδεγμένοι, καὶ τῆς περὶ αὐτὰς οἰκονομίας ἄνωθεν ἐμπειπιστευμένοι τὴν δαχέλησιν . . . Letter of the Patriarch of Constantinople, Anthimos, concerning the independence of the Hellenic Church, see 'Ὁ Συνοδικὸς Τόμος ἡ περὶ ἀληθείας (Athens, 1852), p. 606. Of this book we shall have more to say further on.

Which, now, of the two Churches, we are entitled to ask our readers, more truly answers to the images by which Jesus Christ represented His Church—to a house governed by a single father of a family, to a flock ruled by a single pastor, to a kingdom ruled by a single king? And can it be assumed that the doctrine asserted in the Orthodox Catechisms concerning the external unity of the Church comes from Jesus Christ? Rather is it not from the time in which this doctrine began to prevail, i.e. from Photius' patriarchate, that the dogma of the Church's independence of the State, each being supreme in its own proper sphere,<sup>1</sup> begins to disappear in the teaching of the Oriental Orthodox Church? And at the present day, with the exception of what directly concerns faith, has not the power of jurisdiction over the Church even been asserted to appertain to kings? What dreadful progress towards complete abdication of all the rights which Jesus Christ has conferred upon His Church! To that progress, and to the remarkable coincidence of the great Oriental schism with the enslavement of the Oriental Orthodox Church, we call the attention of our readers, as to a first fruit borne by the denial of the Church's external unity of government as a mark of the true Church of Jesus Christ. We purposely say 'a fruit,' since if it be once admitted that the Church, though externally broken up into many particular Churches dependent only on an Œcumenical Council, still remains the one Church of Jesus Christ, there is no more any reason why every Christian king or queen should not transform the Church of his or her State into a national one, and give it such laws as, the

<sup>1</sup> See above, p. 75, note, and Papp-Szilágyi (Jos.) Enchiridion juris Ecclesiæ Orientalis Catholicæ.—M. Varadin, 1862. 8vo. pars 1, § 180. 'Limites utriusque sacræ et civilis potestatis,' p. 288.

ABSTRACT articles of faith still being preserved, may better suit the exigencies of their political system. Can, now, a doctrine which, in its logical and necessary deductions, as well as by an experience of a thousand years, has proved so highly pernicious to the Church, be safely ascribed to its founder, Jesus Christ?

But there is also another fruit of the same doctrine which, just as little as the enslavement of the Church, can be produced by a doctrine coming from Jesus Christ! This is 'revolution.' Let us examine it.

CHAPTER III.

THE ORIENTAL ORTHODOX CHURCH IS LIABLE TO ANY REVOLUTION, JUST AS CIVIL SOCIETIES ARE.

IN ORDER to prevent misunderstandings and misconceptions, we must state beforehand in what sense we use here the word revolution. By revolution we mean every violent change in the form of government of a society, whatever its causes and consequences may be—whether arising from within or from without. Just as, when speaking of the civil and political history of peoples, one generally designates as revolutions the violent changes of government encountered by them during their existence, so we also designate as revolutions any analogous transformations in the government of the Oriental Orthodox Church. Often, in civil and political history, revolutions are followed by enslavement; this is equally the case with the Oriental Orthodox Church. Yet in this chapter we take into consideration the fact alone of revolution, as our purpose here is to show that ‘there is no stability whatever in the government of the Oriental Orthodox Church.’

In order now to appreciate to its full extent the danger of revolutions, to which the want of external unity of government constantly exposes the Oriental Orthodox Church, we need only look at what is passing every day in political society, and examine to what political revolutions are owing. When does a revolution occur? When people are, or fancy they are, ill governed, and when they see, or fancy they see, their ruler overstepping the limits of his rights and encroaching upon theirs. Revolutions are always and solely the result either of real or of fancied incapacity and abuses of power in rulers; and insurgents never fail to justify themselves by alleging the bad administration of the Sovereign, and by thus representing their act as a legitimate, though violent, attempt to rectify his abuses and to regain their rights.

How far, now, may it be expected that religion should interfere and prevent a revolution? As far as religion makes both people and kings more attentive to the fulfilment of their duties than jealous of the preservation of their rights, thus causing virtue to interfere on both sides in the determination of their reciprocal rights and duties. Without virtue the most clever and elaborate political constitutions will constantly prove insufficient to prevent a single revolution, as no political constitution whatever is able to prevent rights and duties from coming into occasional conflict. Yet religion itself is not likely to obviate all revolutions. A heavy and terrible responsibility rests upon those who create a revolution, and the more so as, even admitting the legitimacy of their grievances, they are bound to weigh before God the relative value of their forfeited rights and the consequences, though but the probable ones, of the revolution they are meditating. Besides, many virtues may strictly forbid what justice alone might perhaps seem to consent to; in a word, no grave theologian would presume to give a rash and perfunctory decision even as to the theoretical legitimacy of a revolution. All this is true, but still there are circumstances which lead people to be deceived as to the lawfulness of a revolution. Moreover, since the appreciation of such circumstances depends on men (and these have long ago chosen to rid themselves of the arbitration of that supreme authority which, in former times, was regarded as invested with the power of settling disputes between peoples and their Sovereigns), men, even without taking into account their passions, are still liable to mistake the extent of the violation of their rights, and to form a wrong judgment, resulting in a revolution.

Now, what happens in politics cannot fail to happen also in religion, on the assumption that Jesus Christ himself did not determine who ought to be entrusted with the supreme authority in the Church. In religion also, as in politics, rights and duties may come into conflict; justice too may seem to consent to a violent recovery of one's rights; here also, in a word, revolutions may threaten; and the more so as religious prejudices and passions have always proved to be the worst and most indomitable. Yet, if this may be generally asserted of every religious society the chief of which is not acknowledged as having been appointed by God Himself—this is especially true with regard to the Oriental Orthodox Church. The reason lies in the fact that those very conflicts between rights and duties which may result in revolutions are constantly impending over the Oriental Orthodox Church on two sides at the same time. Not only has she to fear the rebellion of her sons, but she must also constantly be on her guard lest her government be overthrown or absorbed by the secular power. Her condition, on that account, is like that of a State threatened at the same time by dissensions from within and by a conquest from without; yet, being constantly exposed to both those dangers, she is hardly more secured against them than civil societies are. Instances of the twofold revolutions to which we allude, and of the impotency of the Oriental Church to prevent them, are plentifully afforded by her own history. Let us notice two—the first taken from Russia, the second from Greece.

The so-called reformation of Peter the Great was, in fact, nothing else than a revolution originating in con- tinual conflicts between the civil and ecclesiastical powers. Peter the Great himself took care to make this known to the world: let us quote his words: ‘ This is an argument of great weight and moment (in favour of the establishment of the Synod), that a nation has no suspicion or apprehension of tumults and sedition from a conciliary (subornoe) government, which yet it has too just cause to fear from a single spiritual ruler (the Patriarch of Moscow). For the ignorant vulgar people do not consider how far the spiritual power is removed from (raznstvuiet) the regal, but, in admiration of the splendour and dignity of a high-priest, consider such a ruler as a second sovereign, equal in power to the king himself, or above him, and imagine the spiritual order to be another and better sovereignty: and thus the vulgar do usually think with themselves; and if seditious disputes of some aspiring ecclesiastics are set on foot, they take fire like dry stubble; their silly minds are so biass’d with these conceits, that in every affair they regard not so much the prince as the high-priest; and on the report of a quarrel between them, they blindly and distractedly adhere to, and take part with the spiritual rather than with their civil ruler; and impudently gather together, and raise a tumult in his defence, and—poor, miserable men—flatter themselves that they come together for God’s service, and do not pollute their hands, but sanctify them, when they proceed even to the shedding of blood.

‘ They are no simple, but a crafty part of a kingdom, that greatly rejoice in this disposition of the people; and being disaffected to their sovereign, and observing a misunderstanding between him and the priests, embrace this opportunity as most favourable to the execution of their malice, and, under a pretence of zeal for the Church, make no scruple to lift up their hands against the Lord’s anointed (the Tsar, not the Patriarch). The commonalty are excited to this impiety as to a work of God, especially when the chief pastor is puff'd up with a great opinion of himself and will not rest quiet; 'tis miserable to reflect what calamities will hence ensue. And we are not only capable of making this conjecture in our thoughts, which God inspires us with, but it has very often been demonstrated in fact in many countries, and is particularly manifested in the history of Constantinople down from the reign of Justinian to this time. And the Pope effected so great things by this means, he did not only overthrow the Roman Empire, and grasp a great part of it himself, but more than once has almost shaken the power of other dominions, and threatened them with the last destruction; to say nothing of the like contentions that have been amongst us. In a conciliary spiritual administration there is no place for such a mischief; to wit, on the president himself, the great and extravagant applauses of the people are not therein bestowed; nothing more than the titles of eminence and respect: there are no high opinions of him, nor can flatterers exalt him with immoderate commendations, for what is well done in such an administration cannot be ascribed to the president alone. The appellation itself of president is not an arrogant one, for it denotes nothing more than one that presides (predsedatel, one that sits before, or in presence of others); for which reason he cannot think highly of himself, nor others think so of him. And when the nation is farther convinced that this synodical power is established by a law of the monarch, with the advice of his Senate, they will entirely acquiesce under it, and lay aside all hopes of having their seditions supported by the assistance of the spiritual order.<sup>1</sup>

With the 'great things effected by the Popes,' to which

<sup>1</sup> Spir. Reg. part i. § 7; Полн. Собр. Зак. tom. vi.; Дух. Регл. p. 317; Consett, pp. 18-21.

Peter refers, as well as with the calm procured to the Russian Church by the establishment of the Synod, and which might perhaps be likened to the calm succeeding agony, and preceding death, we are not at present concerned. So we now only point out the fact that the overthrow of the Patriarchate of Moscow and the consequent revolution effected by Peter in the Russian Orthodox Church were due to conflicts between the civil and ecclesiastical powers. And with such conflicts the Oriental Orthodox Church is constantly threatened. In Russia and Greece, it is true, thanks to the complete absorption of the ecclesiastical into the civil power, she may enjoy, for some years, the calm spoken of by Peter; but wherever she has preserved a shadow of independence, she is permanently in danger of revolutions, like that accomplished by the Russian autocrat. And what can she oppose to them? Is she able to say, like the Catholic Church, non possumus? Can she allege, without condemning herself, the precept 'Date Cæsari quæ sunt Cæsaris et quæ sunt Dei Deo'—'Render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and to God the things that are God's' (Matt. xxii. 21)? or is she entitled to make an appeal to the conscience of the faithful for the maintenance of rights she has so willingly, in other countries, conferred upon kings?

The second revolution to which we alluded, as an instance of such originated in the Oriental Orthodox Church by the rebellion of her sons, is afforded by what took place in Greece. At the time of the Hellenic war of independence, the Church of Greece was subject to the Patriarch of Constantinople. As soon as the Greeks had succeeded in delivering themselves from the dominion of the Sultan, they became equally desirous of getting rid of the spiritual jurisdiction of the Patriarch of Constantinople. They did not wait for his consent. In spite of his strong opposition, the independence of the Hellenic Church was unanimously proclaimed by the bishops assembled at Nauplia on the 15th (27th) July, 1833, no less than seventeen years before the Patriarch of Constantinople had given his consent thereto (29th June [11th July] 1850). In the meantime, the Hellenic Church behaved just as if the Patriarch of Constantinople did not exist. Moreover, when the celebrated Συνοδικὸς τόμος, or the solemn act by which the Patriarch Anthimos, at the request of the Greek Government helped by the good offices of Russia, finally consented to recognise the independence of the Hellenic Church, was made known, instead of calling forth praises and thanksgivings, it encountered from some the most bitter criticism. Though granting his confirmation to the independence of the Hellenic Church, the Patriarch pointed out the uncanonical nature of their existing organisation and what changes were necessary to justify his recognition (see above, p. 134, note). In all this, moreover, he spoke with full conviction of the past rights of the Patriarchs of Constantinople over the Hellenic Church, and used the language of a father towards children, granting them some concessions, but not all they required. No more was needed in order to arouse a storm of contumely against the ἱερός Συνοδικὸς τόμος (Holy Synodical Volume). A complete refutation of every word contained in the Τόμος was shortly after undertaken, and appeared in 1852, in Athens, under the title of 'The Synodical Volume, that is, On Truth.'<sup>1</sup> The very first words show what the refutation is. They read as follows:—'We have written against the Volume of the Synod of Constantinople. Yet, the Synodical Volume is termed holy, most holy, admirable! Oh, impiety!' etc.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> 'Ὁ Συνοδικὸς τόμος, ἡ περὶ ἀληθείας—'Εν Ἀθήναις τύποις Νικολάου Ἀγγελίδου. 1852. 8vo.

<sup>2</sup> Ἐγράψαμεν κατὰ τοῦ τόμου τῆς συνόδου τῆς ἐν Κωνσταντινουπόλει

But what, in this refutation, deserves more attention are the principles laid down in it. We refer our readers to the chapters 'On the Unity of the Church' (Περὶ ἐνότητος ἐκκλησιαστικῆς, p. 161) and 'On the Jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Constantinople over the Hellenic Church' (Περὶ δικαιοδοσίας τοῦ Κωνσταντινουπόλεως ἀρχιεπισκόπου ἐπὶ τῆς Ἑλληνικῆς ἐκκλησίας, p. 219). The following is the general conclusion of the last quoted chapter: 'According to the dogma of faith and the order of the Catholic Orthodox Church, as it has been handed down from the beginning, the Church of every State is entitled to be governed by an ecclesiastical authority of her own, without being subject to the Archbishop and Œcumenical Patriarch of Constantinople, or to any other of the existing patriarchs.'<sup>1</sup> A little before the same author had spoken in the following terms of the jurisdiction of the Patriarchs of Constantinople over the Hellenic Church. We preserve the same difference of type of the original Greek: 'From all the particulars, in fine, which we have compendiously stated, what is the proper conclusion? That the Church of Greece was NEVER subject CANONICALLY to the Archbishop of Constantinople, NEVER was dependent upon him CANONICALLY; NEVER was the Archbishop of Constantinople the PROPER CANONICAL Archbishop of that country.'<sup>2</sup> ἐκκλησίας. 'Ἄλλ' ὁ Συνοδικὸς τόμος λέγεται ἱερὸς, ἱερώτατος, προσκυνητός!

* Ὡσέβεια! etc.

J. T. Pitzipios, in his 'L'Église orientale' (Rome, 1855), speaks of this same book, but giving it the title of 'Ἀντίτομος ἡ περὶ ἀληθείας, iv. p. 57, note. The author of it is the Archimandrite Pharmakides.

<sup>1</sup> Κατὰ τὸ δόγμα τῆς πίστεως καὶ τὴν ἀνέκαθεν παραδεδεγμένην τάξιν τῆς καθολικῆς ἐκκλησίας τῶν ὀρθοδόξων δύναται παντὸς Κράτους ἡ Ἐκκλησία νὰ κυβερνᾶται ὑπὸ ἰδίας ἐκκλησιαστικῆς ἀρχῆς χωρὶς νὰ ὑπόκειται εἰς τὸν τῆς Κωνσταντινουπόλεως ἀρχιεπίσκοπον καὶ οἰκουμενικὸν πατριάρχην, ἢ εἰς ἄλλον τινὰ τῶν ὑπαρχόντων πατριαρχῶν, p. 272.

<sup>2</sup> Ἐξ ὧσαν λοιπὸν ἐν συντόμῳ εἶπομεν, τί συμπεραίνεται; "Ὅτι ἡ Ἐκκλησία τῆς Ἑλλάδος ΟΥΔΕΠΟΤΕ ὑπετάχθη ΚΑΝΟΝΙΚΩΣ τῷ ἀρχιεπισκόπῳ τῆς

Finally, as a last illustration of its contents, we quote the following passage concerning Peter's revolution in the Russian Orthodox Church. It will at once, should any of our readers have called in question the exactness of our statements when speaking of the establishment of the Synod, bear evidence to whatever we may have affirmed on that subject.

‘But the clearest demonstration of deceit, fraud, and artifice is seen in what follows. The autocrat of Russia, the glorious Peter the Great, when he had suppressed BY HIS OWN AUTHORITY the patriarchate (of Moscow) which had been constituted by the common sentence and agreement of the four Patriarchs of the Eastern Church, set up in its place the Most Holy Governing Synod. Having appointed it on the 25th of February [? January], 1721, by letter of the 30th of September he informed the Church of Constantinople of his proceedings. The autocrat's letter to this Church is nearly identical with that of the Hellenic Council of Ministers. Whence is it, then, that, the conduct of Russia and that of Greece being almost identical, the Church of Constantinople being still the same, the Holy Ghost the same, the declaratory letter the same, yet the conduct of the Church of Constantinople is in all respects different, and her reply quite another!!! Why? Because,’ &c.<sup>1</sup>

Κωνσταντινουπόλεως, ΟΥΔΕΠΟΤΕ ἐξήρτητο ἐξ αὐτοῦ ΚΑΝΟΝΙΚΩΣ, ΟΥΔΕΠΟΤΕ ἦτον οὗτος αὐτῆς ΟΙΚΕΙΟΣ ΚΑΝΟΝΙΚΩΣ ἀρχιεπίσκοπος, Ibid. p. 271.

<sup>1</sup> Ἀλλὰ τῆς ἀπάτης, τοῦ δόλου καὶ τῆς ἐπιβουλῆς τρανωτάτῃ ἀποδείξει καὶ τοῦτο. Ὁ αὐτοκράτωρ τῆς Ῥωσσίας, ὁ αἰόδιμος Πέτρος ὁ Μέγας, καταργήσας ΑΥΤΕΞΟΥΣΙΩΣ τὴν κοινῇ γνώμῃ καὶ συγκαταθέσει τῶν τεσσάρων πατριαρχῶν τῆς Ἀνατολικῆς ἐκκλησίας κατασταθεῖσαν πατριαρχίαν, ἀνήγειρεν εἰς τὸν τόπον αὐτῆς τὴν ἀγιοτάτην διοικοῦσαν Σύνοδον. Καταστήσας δὲ αὐτὴν τὴν κ' Φεβρουαρίου τοῦ ρψκ' ἔτους, τὴν λ' τοῦ Σεπτεμβρίου τοῦ αὐτοῦ ἔτους ἀνήγγειλε τὴν αὐτοῦ πρᾶξιν πρὸς τὴν ἐν Κωνσταντινουπόλει ἐκκλησίαν. Ἡ πρὸς αὐτὴν ἐπιστολὴ τοῦ αὐτοκράτορος εἶναι ἡ αὐτὴ σχεδὸν τῇ ἐπιστολῇ τοῦ ἑλληνικοῦ ὑπουργικοῦ συμβουλίου. Ὅθεν ἡ ῥωσικὴ καὶ ἡ ἑλληνικὴ πρᾶξις σχεδὸν ἡ αὐτὴ, ἡ ἐν Κωνσταντινουπόλει ἐκκλησία ἡ αὐτὴ, τὸ ἅγιον Πνεῦμα τὸ

Such quotations need no comment. The seed of all revolutions, and the previous apology for them, are both to be found in this book. The jurisdiction of the Patriarch of Constantinople is there discussed in such a way as to incite other provinces, still under the same jurisdiction, to call it in question, and, after the example of Greece, to refuse to obey it. Moreover, the ecclesiastical jurisdiction being made a matter of historical discussion, no patriarch, no metropolitan, no bishop whatever is secured from some day witnessing a portion of his flock withdrawing from him, on account of some ancient document showing the primitive illegitimacy of some predecessor's jurisdiction. Finally, the principle so plainly and vigorously asserted in this book, that the Church of every State is entitled to make herself independent, necessarily puts the Oriental Orthodox Church on a level with civil societies, and causes ecclesiastical jurisdiction to be dependent on the success of arms and the cleverness of conspirators.

In fact people never stop at theory, as, should anyone doubt of it, recent events have too evidently proved. The good example thus set by Greece could not fail to find sincere appreciators and zealous imitators. Some years later Prince Couza<sup>1</sup> tried to do the same in Roumania, and, in more recent times, the Bulgarian Church, in alleging historical rights of independence on the Patriarchate of Constantinople did nothing else than reduce to practice the lessons she had been taught by the Archi-αὐτὸ, ἡ ἐξαγγελτικὴ ἐπιστολὴ ἡ αὐτὴ, καὶ ἡ πράξις τῆς ἐν Κωνσταντινουπόλει ἐκκλησίας πάντα διάφορος, καὶ ἡ ἀπάντησις ἑλλή καὶ ἑλλην!!! Διὰ τί; Διότι κ.τ.λ. 'Ο Συνοδικὸς Τόμος, pp. 596, 597.

<sup>1</sup> Striking observations of the Patriarch of Constantinople, the Synod of Russia, the Russian Government, and the Russian newspapers, upon Prince Couza's reforms in the Roumanian Church, are collected in the above-mentioned book of F. Gagarin, Le Clergé russe, p. 248 et seq.

mandrite Pharmakides in the second part of his book, 'Ο Συνοδικὸς Τόμος ἡ περὶ ἀληθείας, Chapter I. 'On Unity in the Church' (p. 161 et seq.), and Chapter V. 'On the Jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Constantinople over the Hellenic Church' (p. 219). Nay! the fate of the Oriental Orthodox Church will undoubtedly be in the future what it has been in the past: enslavement, with revolutions.

The chief independent authorities which actually share among themselves the government of the Oriental Orthodox Church are of human institution. Of human institution are the Tsar and the Synod of St. Petersburg; of human institution are the King of Greece and the Synod of Athens; of human institution is the present oligarchy formed by the four Oriental Patriarchates of Constantinople, Alexandria, Antioch, and Jerusalem. Now, what men have made men can destroy. Why should the canons of the Œcumenical Councils concerning the rights of the four Oriental Patriarchs deserve greater reverence and greater respect than many other canons of the same Councils, long since set aside? Or do the Synods of St. Petersburg and of Athens (not to speak of their sovereigns as 'heads of the Church') deserve more consideration than the rights of the former Patriarch of Moscow, and the Patriarch of Constantinople? The utility of such institutions for the welfare of the Church is only a matter of circumstance; let circumstances change, let political events suggest as more suitable to the condition of the Orthodox faithful other forms of ecclesiastical government, other partitions of the ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and the Oriental Orthodox Church will undoubtedly show herself no less pliable to circumstances in the future than she has done in the past. Why, again, if it be granted that Jesus Christ left to her the care of constituting herself in such a way as might best suit the interests of the faithful—why should she not be ready to pass through the most varying forms of government? In the patriarchates she is constituted into a monarchy, in the kingdom of Greece (not taking into account the King) she is governed by the half of her bishops, in Russia (to say nothing of the Tsar) the democratical element is already strongly represented, as of the seven members of the Synod two are not even bishops.

And might it not, moreover, become a duty for her to consult, in this respect, the tendencies of the different epochs, and to conform herself to them? Accordingly, why might she not, at the present day, form herself into a republic? Is there a wider interval between a patriarchate and a Russian synod than between such a synod and a republic? It would hardly be possible for her to act in future in greater opposition to her own doctrine than she has done in the past. Since WOMEN have ruled over her, since laymen have been entitled to exercise such an extensive and vexatious control over her bishops, why should the inferior clergy be excluded from sharing largely in the government of the Church? And should any one refuse to admit the possibility we are now pointing out, we need only refer him to what happened in the year 1833 in the kingdom of Greece, when Greece was about to carry into effect her plans of ecclesiastical independence. The subject was fairly discussed in the public papers, and many of them, says an historian, demanded ‘that not only the bishops should be consulted, but also the archimandrites, and even representatives of the hieromonachs and deacons. Some papers, moreover, urged that the matter should be discussed in a general national assembly.’<sup>1</sup> Is there then a wide interval between a national assembly discussing matters of ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and the ecclesiastical republic we are alluding to?

<sup>1</sup> ‘Auch die öffentlichen Blätter endlich fingen an sich in diese Angelegenheiten zu mischen. Ein Blatt, der Xpónos, das Blatt der sogenannten

But if an Orthodox ecclesiastical republic is not beyond the limits of possibility, what is equally within those limits is that the whole Orthodox Church should be constituted into a monarchy, with a single visible head, who, still as Vicar of Christ, should rule over her. Let only the cherished dream of Russian patriots be realised, and Russia have conquered all the countries of the Oriental Orthodox Creed, and another Tsar, like Peter, feel compelled by his conscience to apply also to the newly conquered portion of the Oriental Orthodox Church the 'Spiritual Regulation,' the Holy Synod, the Synod's Chief Procurator, and the 'Statute of the Ecclesiastical Consistories;'—would not, in this case, the whole Oriental Orthodox Church, through the mere military successes of Russia, be constituted into a monarchy? And would she not, moreover, then offer to the world the spectacle of a Church rejecting as a heresy the doctrine of a single visible head of the Church, and herself being at the same time ruled by such an one? And if such a lay Pope should ever become openly heretical or an active partisan of rationalism, or if he should be ever replaced by an irreligious oligarchy, or by an infidel republic, or even by an atheistic commune itself—which events are all equally possible—at what a disadvantage would the Christian, not to say Orthodox minority, find itself, when it had to re-assert, against the only existing authority, the right of a Christian society to exist and to govern itself? What would be the ground to be taken, and by whom?

Capodistrianer, sprach ganz im Sinne des aus Russland und vom Berge Athos gekommenen Prälaten und Mönchs, gegen die zu ergreifenden Maassregeln. Die andere Blätter waren zwar dafür, nur wollten sie nicht allein die Berufung der Bischöfe, sondern auch noch der Archimandriten, sogar die Berufung von Repräsentanten der Priester—Mönche und Diakone. Sie verlangten ausserdem noch öffentliche Berathung. Manche sogar die Berufung einer Nationalversammlung, um über diesen hochwichtigen Gegenstand zu entscheiden.'—Maurer (von), Das griechische Volk in öffentlicher kirchlicher und privat-rechtlicher Beziehung (Heidelberg, 1835), Band ii. 157.

Let us, before concluding this chapter, point out another sad feature of the Oriental Orthodox Church. Not only is she unable to obviate such great revolutions as those to which we allude, but she is equally unable either finally to settle disputes of jurisdiction between bishops and bishops, or even effectually to prevent rebellions of the inferior clergy against their superiors. Nowhere in the Oriental Orthodox Church is there to be found an authority whose judgments in matters of jurisdiction necessarily bind, without future appeal, the conscience of the claimants. The limits of jurisdiction between bishops and bishops, and between bishops and their clergy, being a matter of ecclesiastical discipline and policy, contests must necessarily arise. Now unless some one be acknowledged as invested by God with the power of giving and withdrawing jurisdiction in such a way that what he gives or withdraws be incontestably (as to the validity of the sentence) given or withdrawn by God Himself, contests about ecclesiastical jurisdiction become of the same nature, and encounter the same fate, as any other contests for the possession of a real or asserted right. In other words, the only means by which the Oriental Orthodox Church is able to settle such disputes are mutual agreements or compromises—to be relied upon as far as human nature may warrant. Human nature cannot be bent by force; so long as persuasion is wanting, virtue or the force of external circumstances alone can prevent those who believe themselves unjustly robbed of a right, from exercising it. If a bishop of the Turkish empire, whose quarrel with a neighbour-bishop has been settled by a decree of the Patriarch, or a firman of the Sultan, is not convinced of the lawfulness of the judgment, who and what can bind his conscience to submit to the decision whenever he can safely attempt to regain his lost rights? And what we say of the quarrels between bishops and bishops may be equally applied to disputes about jurisdiction between bishops and their clergy. The removal of bishops at pleasure by the sovereigns, the occasional withdrawing of a portion of a bishop's flock from his jurisdiction because of mere political events which alone have changed the limits of his diocese, and above all the public and emphatic disregard shown, more than once, by rebellious subjects for the jurisdiction of their legitimate pastors, and subsequently sanctioned and made good by the pastors themselves—all this shows, without comment, what episcopal jurisdiction in the Oriental Orthodox Church is reduced to.

Nay, for this Church the alternative is Catholicism or revolution. Some years ago F. Gagarin, in a celebrated pamphlet, 'La Russie sera-t-elle catholique?'<sup>1</sup> stated that such is the dire dilemma in which Russia will soon find herself. Yet he spoke of a political revolution. We venture to put the same dilemma with reference to a religious revolution, and to extend it to the whole Oriental Orthodox Church—Catholicism or revolution! Of the last we have said enough; to Catholicism let us now turn our attention. Jesus Christ could not Himself have taught

<sup>1</sup> Paris, Douniol, 1856, in 8vo. One of the German translations of this work bears the following title: Wird Russland's Kirche das Papstthum anerkennen? with introduction and notes, by the celebrated Baron von Haxthausen (Münster, 1857). A Russian translation by F. J. Martinoff, S.J., appeared shortly afterwards in Paris, under this title:—О примирении Русской Церкви съ Римскою. (Paris, Frank. 1858.)

His Church a doctrine, concerning her visible unity, the mere application of which has had, and will constantly have, for its necessary result enslavement and revolution. Is it not in Catholicism that the true doctrine of Jesus Christ concerning the unity of the Church is to be found? Some words, as a conclusion of the whole work, will enable every one to answer this question for himself.

CHAPTER IV.

THE ROMAN PAPACY.

TO Jesus Christ—to GOD—there cannot, without impiety, be ascribed a doctrine which, when reduced to practice, necessarily ends for the Church in enslavement and revolutions. The Church is more truly, and in a more perfect and specific sense, a society of God than other human societies are. Mankind comes from God, God being the common Creator and Father of all men ; and in this sense it may well be said that all human societies are of God. But out of the immense number of created men, and from the numerous particular societies they form, God has gathered to Himself one society of privileged and more beloved sons. Master of His love, as He is master of His gifts, God has been pleased to bestow both more abundantly on a certain portion of mankind. This society of God's privileged and more beloved sons is the Church, and the blood of Jesus Christ was her price. A society conquered and bought at such a price well deserved that Jesus Christ, before leaving the earth, should not omit to prescribe for her such laws and institutions as should not only perpetuate her on earth, but enable her more perfectly to accomplish the mission given her, of leading men to eternal salvation. This Jesus Christ did not fail to do, and the Church was in fact provided by Him with rules and instructions for all her future necessities, and for whatever might concern, not only her existence, but also, so to speak, the details of her organisation. The sacraments, the ministry of the sacraments, and who are to be entrusted with the mission of teaching in the Church, all this has been pre-established and clearly prescribed by Jesus Christ.

Yet, according to the Oriental Orthodox Church, this very society of Jesus Christ exhibits to the world the strangest phenomenon ever presented by a society. The Founder of the Church, Jesus Christ, has omitted to tell her, with sufficient clearness, who is to be entrusted with the highest authority over her. Jesus Christ has taken care Himself to appoint the degrees of her hierarchy of order, the bishops, the priests, and even the deacons; but her hierarchy of jurisdiction, i.e. of government, He has left to the Church's care. GOD has founded His society with so little foresight as to omit, while giving it many other laws, just that one which was necessary to secure its existence, viz. the law of its government! In fact, since laymen and women have been empowered, in the Oriental Orthodox Church, to exercise jurisdiction over bishops, this plainly shows that she considers herself just as much mistress of the ecclesiastical jurisdiction as if Jesus Christ had not given her any prescription whatever respecting it.

Now, can we even suppose that Jesus Christ—GOD—has been that strange Founder? No, since the doctrine of the Oriental Orthodox Church necessarily results for her in enslavement and revolutions, let us rather acknowledge that Jesus Christ himself must have prescribed the form of Church government, and that the Divine Founder of the Church must, by the expression of His divine will, have prevented the perpetual contest which would else be produced by men's passions and self-will.

But how are we to know what is Jesus Christ's will concerning the government of the Church? To serious readers we need not remark that our enquiry would never obtain any result if we had previously to examine all the different forms of government in human societies, on the assumption that the best among them would necessarily be the very one given by Jesus Christ to his Church. If we mistake not, there is no other question that causes more irreconcilable differences of opinion among men than that as to the best form of government, and, very likely, many readers, taught by history and experience, have long since adopted on this matter the poet's opinion:—

For forms of government let fools contest,
Whate'er is best administer'd is best.<sup>1</sup>

Evidently we must follow some other way than that of a previous discussion of the best form of government. The Holy Scripture indeed and the tradition of the Church well answer the question, yet we do not purpose to speak of them. We beg rather to call the attention of the reader to a fact, patent, evident, inseparable from the very existence of the Oriental Orthodox Church, beginning from Jesus Christ, continuing down to the formation of the schism, and from that time again down to our day. It is this—that never, since Jesus Christ, has a single bishop, either in Russia, or in the four Oriental Patriarchates, or in Greece, been bishop of his own diocese without being at the same time either subject to another bishop or himself superior to another. The extent of such superiority of one bishop over another may indeed have varied according to epochs and countries; its exercise may have been confined to a few special cases; but still, never since Jesus Christ, has a bishop, either in Russia, or in the four Patriarchates, or in Greece, existed, who has not been related either by superiority or inferiority to another bishop. The appellations of archbishop, metropolitan, primate, patriarch, holy governing synod, holy synod, have been granted to the bishop or bishops invested with the superiority we allude to; the titles also have varied, like the degrees of superiority attached to the titles; yet still, never has the mere episcopal dignity been the supreme dignity in the Oriental Orthodox Church, never has a simple bishop constituted the highest degree in the hierarchy of the Oriental Orthodox Church.

<sup>1</sup> Alexander Pope, Essay on Man, 3rd epilogue, at the end.

Now, unless it be admitted that a fact of such importance, which, being beyond any doubt, is admitted by all Orthodox and is inseparable from the very existence of the Oriental Orthodox Church, must be considered as a casualty, a mere result of circumstances, and by no means a hint of Providence, it evidently shows that there must be in the Church a divinely instituted authority superior to simple bishops. The doctrine that the bishop is the supreme and independent chief of his particular Church would be in such open opposition to the practice of the Oriental Orthodox Church, that we need only point out this opposition as the best argument by which the doctrine itself might be refuted.

Yet, where then is there to be found among the numberless authorities which, under the most various forms and names, have governed Oriental Orthodox bishops, or, at any rate, have possessed hierarchal pre-eminence over them, an authority to be relied upon as really appointed by Jesus Christ? History will answer the question. An authority appointed by Jesus Christ must necessarily have existed from the time of Jesus Christ down to our day. Let us first select the Œcumenical Patriarch of Constantinople. About three hundred years had already elapsed since the ascension of Our Lord, and the city of Constantine had only begun to be known to the world, when its Patriarch appeared. His first appearance in the world was therefore very late; he cannot have been appointed by Jesus Christ—the Patriarchate of Jerusalem is not of more ancient date than that of Constantinople; it cannot then have been instituted by Jesus Christ. Neither the Holy Governing Synod of St. Petersburg (1721) nor the Synod of Athens (1833) has been established by Jesus Christ, nor are they likely to advance the slightest pretension to such a claim. Two Patriarchates remain; they have not been directly instituted by Jesus Christ, but the history of their origin is inseparable from that of the holy Apostle to whom ALONE Jesus Christ said, 'Feed my lambs; feed my sheep.' (John xxi. 15, 17.)

'St. Peter,' says Neale, 'founded the See of Antioch; and, on leaving it for Rome, ordained St. Euodius his first successor. . . '—'St. Peter,' says the same author, 'about the year 37, appears to have sent St. Mark into Egypt. . . St. Mark returned for a season to Jerusalem. . . From Palestine, St. Mark accompanied St. Peter to Rome. It was here that, under the direction of the Apostle, he wrote his Gospel. . . It was, apparently, towards the year 49, that St. Mark returned to Egypt; and there, till the time of his decease, he laboured with great success. And during this period the first church in Alexandria is said to have been built.'<sup>1</sup>

Now, as to the Patriarchate of Alexandria, it can advance no claim to a Divine institution except in virtue of St. Mark's having been sent there by St. Peter. St. Mark, it is well known, was not of the number of the Apostles upon whom St. Paul says that the Church has been built (Eph. ii. 20).<sup>2</sup>—With regard to the Patriarchate of Antioch, it has been directly founded by <sup>1</sup> Neale (John Mason), A History of the Holy Eastern Church, General Introduction, i. chap. vi. p. 123, and vol. i. The Patriarchate of Alexandria, pp. 6, 7.

<sup>2</sup> It is worthy of remark that the liturgy of the Oriental Orthodox Church calls St. Peter not only the foundation of the Church (by antonomasia), (ἡ κρηπίς τῆς Ἐκκλησίας, ОСНОВАНИЕ ЦЕРКВЕ), but also 'foundation of the Apostles,' and, moreover, 'supreme foundation of the Apostles' (ἡ κορυφαία

St. Peter. But, if the two Patriarchates of Antioch and Alexandria may lay some claim to a divine institution because of having been founded by Peter, that of Rome also may advance the same claim. ‘There were,’ says Neale again, ‘many Christians both at Antioch and at Rome before St. Peter set foot in either place; yet antiquity always considered him as the founder of the Churches in each.’<sup>1</sup>

The simple fact of an Apostolical origin, however, may not be considered as decisive on the question with which we are now dealing. The conduct of the Church must also be attended to. The two Patriarchates of Antioch and Alexandria have not, even in the canons of the Œcumenical Councils, preserved their place of honour before that of Constantinople. Now, men cannot place what is human before what is of God, and the Church of Jesus Christ cannot even be supposed to have been guilty of that sin. Moreover, the Oriental Orthodox Church, let us remark again, has never so behaved with regard to those two Patriarchates as if there were any special will of Jesus Christ to interfere with her decisions concerning them. Finally, an authority confined to geographical limits cannot be the one we are looking for, since Jesus Christ could not, by the institution of such an authority, have been providing for a catholic, that is, for an universal Church.

Yes! an authority has disappeared from the Oriental Orthodox Church which was with her before the schism of Photius. It reappeared, and more than once, for a while, but in the eleventh century after Christ it finally disappeared. It is since its disappearance that enslavement κλησις τῶν Ἀποστόλων. ВЕРХОВНОЕ ОСНОВАНІЕ АПОСТОЛѢВЪ. (See our publication: La Primauté de saint Pierre prouvée par les titres que lui donne l'Église russe dans sa liturgie, p. 10 (Paris, Palmé; London, Burns, Oates & Co. 1867).)

<sup>1</sup> Neale, ibid. vol. i. p. 5.

and revolutions have formed the history of the Oriental Orthodox Church. This authority is the only one fit for a catholic, that is, an universal Church; this is the only one which leads us back to Jesus Christ; this is the only one which has been spoken of in the Church as coming from Him. Either this is from God, or God did not appoint any authority whatever for the government of that very Church which He has conquered and bought with His blood.

And this authority—the Pope—is the only one which is able to preserve the Church from enslavement and revolutions. More than eighteen centuries have elapsed since Jesus Christ, and the same answer of the Apostles to the chiefs of the Jews, ‘If it be just in the sight of God to hear you rather than God, judge ye’ (Acts iv. 19), is in the mouth of the successors of Peter. Thus far as to enslavement: moreover, no one accuses the Catholic Church of being liable to be enslaved!

Let us rather see if revolutions may threaten her. No revolution is possible in a Church whenever her chief is believed to have been personally appointed by God Himself; and this is the case with the Catholic Church. Her monarchical form of government, and the designation of the Bishop of Rome, as the visible head of the Church, constitute two articles of the Catholic faith; they cannot consequently be matter of dispute; all questions as to the Church’s form of government and the choice of the persons to be entrusted with it are settled for ever. Discontent with the present government, desire for another, and, above all, the vulgar illusion of infirm minds that change should necessarily bring alleviation; these causes of revolution in civil societies and in the Oriental Orthodox Church, are not to be feared among Catholics. They accept the monarchical form of government of the Church and the designation of the Bishop of Rome as her head, as they accept any other points of their religious creed, even those less indulgent to human inclinations. Attempts to change the form of government of the Catholic Church, or to transfer the supreme authority from the Bishop of Rome to any other, are considered by Catholics just as sinful and senseless as attempts to change the form or matter of the sacraments; the very moment a man has made up his mind to overthrow the Papacy he has ceased to be a Catholic.

Further, in the Catholic Church alone can the jurisdiction of the bishops be effectually supported, the bishops themselves secured from becoming mere 'primi inter pares' among their clergy, and quarrels of jurisdiction between bishops, or between bishops and their clergy settled for ever. And why so? Because in the Catholic Church alone exists an authority which not only is entitled to exercise full jurisdiction over the universal Church, but, moreover, is itself the master and the source of ecclesiastical jurisdiction. A jurisdiction not consented to by the Pope is no more jurisdiction, but usurpation, and any acts of such a jurisdiction are null and void before God as well as before men. In every question concerning ecclesiastical jurisdiction Catholics possess a sure standard and an infallible criterion for distinguishing the real and efficacious jurisdiction from the pretended and vain; namely, the conformity of the claims with the prescriptions of the Holy See. The Pope may pronounce a sentence depriving a bishop of a right of which the latter was the lawful possessor; the Pope may well be deceived as to the unjust claims of the pretender, he is even liable to indulge his personal inclinations and, in his sentence, to favour the usurper, but still from the very moment his sentence is made known to the claimants, the only lawful jurisdiction for them is that consented to by the Pope. Should the limits of the former jurisdiction be altered, and should the usurper be allowed to retain what he has usurped, and the innocent commanded not to lay claim any more to his former possession, what the Pope has commanded is ratified as to its validity by God himself. Until the Pope consents to a new trial, the jurisdiction originally usurped has become, and remains, the only real and legitimate one.<sup>1</sup>

Let us, on this important subject, take an illustration from what happens in civil societies. The civil and military functionaries of a State are appointed and dismissed by its chief—let it be a king—only too often for motives other than justice and merit. No one, however, calls in question the validity of the royal acts by which civil and military functionaries are appointed or dismissed; and no soldier, for instance, would dare to refuse obedience to his newly appointed general on the assumption that his nomination was owing to intrigue. Likewise when, in a case of quarrel as to the extent of civil or military jurisdiction, the king's sentence interferes, no one would presume either to contest its validity or declare the claimants entitled to act in opposition to it, or, finally, attach any value to the exercise of a civil and military jurisdiction not consented to by the king. And this doctrine as to the validity of the royal acts conferring, withdrawing, restraining, enlarging, or in any way modifying civil and military jurisdiction, is acknowledged and felt by every man, not only as the only one which may consist with the State's peace and prosperity, but even as the only one which causes a State to be really a State and not rather a coalition of intelligent beings.

<sup>1</sup> 'Quod si Papa in hoc ipso judicio erret nihilominus valebit actus; si enim Christus dispensandi facultatem ei non tribuisset nisi sub hac conditione, quod non erraret existimando adesse justam causam, haud sapienter egisset. Cum enim in hisce particularibus negotiis infallibilitatis prerogativam Romano Pontifici non dederit, numquam certum omnino foret validam esse (Episcopi) depositionem aut inviti translationem, quam faciendam duxisset Papa ex causa necessitatis aut utilitatis.'—D. Bouix, De Jure Episcoporum (Paris, 1852), vol. i. p. 373.

Why, now, should it not be so in the Church? Why should not that which is the necessary element for every society's peace and prosperity be granted—in a more perfect way and by a divine right—to the society of Jesus Christ, to the Church? Let it consequently be supposed—as the case is not an impossible one—that the rights of a bishop should be violated by a neighbouring bishop, and the usurper refuse to respect them. In that case a sentence from the Pope annulling his acts settles the contest immediately and finally. The usurper's acts being declared by the Pope null and void, no Catholic will adhere to them, and should the usurper act in opposition to the sentence of the Pope, he is exposed to see himself deserted by anyone who desires to remain in the communion of the Catholic Church. The Fathers of the Vatican Council have consequently expressed but an elementary truth and a patent fact when they declared in the third chapter of the dogmatical Constitution 'de Ecclesia' that, 'So far is the power of the Supreme Pontiff from being any prejudice to the ordinary and immediate power of episcopal jurisdiction, by which bishops, who have been set by the Holy Ghost to succeed and hold the place of the Apostles,<sup>1</sup> feed and govern, each his own flock, as true Pastors, that this their episcopal authority is really asserted, strengthened, and protected by the supreme and universal Pastor; in accordance with the words of St. Gregory the Great: "My honour is the honour of the whole Church. My honour is the firm strength of my brethren. I am truly honoured when the honour due to each and all is not withheld."'<sup>2</sup>—Lett. book viii. 30, vol. ii. p. 919, Benedictine edit. (Paris, 1705).<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Conc. Trid. ch. iv. sess. xxiii: 'De ecclesiastica hierarchia et ordinatione.'

<sup>2</sup> Constit. dogm.: 'Pastor æternus,' Jul. 18, 1870, chap. iii.

After having listened to this declaration of the Fathers of the Vatican Council, we are better enabled to enter into the subject of the limits to the Pope's authority and jurisdiction as well as of any possible abuse of his power. 'The Pope,' so reads the same Constitution 'de Ecclesia,' 'has full and supreme power of jurisdiction over the universal Church.' No Catholic, however, well acquainted with the doctrine of his Church, ever did, or ever will, understand these words in the sense that the Pope is entitled to do in the Church 'whatever he likes.' The Pope's power of jurisdiction has its limits, and they were traced centuries ago, with singular happiness of expression, by a man whom the Catholic Church honours and proclaims both as a saint and as one of her Doctors; we mean St. Bernard. In his treatise 'De Consideratione,' dedicated to his former disciple, the Pope Eugenius III., the Saint thus addresses the Pope: 'You preside, yet that you may be useful.<sup>1</sup> . . . You preside. Is it in order that you may take advantage of your subjects? No, but in order that these may take advantage from you.<sup>2</sup> Do you perhaps fancy that it is lawful to you to mutilate the Church in its members, to confuse order, to disturb limits your fathers fixed? . . . You err if you deem your apostolic power, as it is the highest, so also that it is the only one appointed by God. If so you think, you differ from Him who said, "There is no power but of God."<sup>3</sup> . . . You are

<sup>1</sup> Præsis ut provideas, ut consulas, ut procures, ut serves. Præsis ut prosis: præsis ut fidelis servus et prudens, quem constituit dominum super familiam suam. Ad quid? Ut des illis escam in tempore (Matt. xxiv. 45); hoc est, ut dispenses, non imperes. Hoc fac et dominari ne affectes hominum homo, ut non dominetur tui omnis injustitia.—Lib. iii. c. i. No. 2. ed. Migne (Paris, 1854), Patrologiæ; cursus completus, tom. 182, p. 759.

<sup>2</sup> Præes, et singulariter. Ad quid? Eget tibi dico, de consideratione. Numquid ut de subditis crescas? Nequaquam, sed ut ipsi de te.—Lib. iii. c. iii. No. 13. p. 764.

<sup>3</sup> Tunc, denique tibi licitum censeas, suis ecclesias mutilare membris, confundere ordinem, perturbare terminos, quos posuerunt patres tui? Si

“stewards to edification, not to destruction.” “Stewards must be faithful.” . . . Their utility is common not personal . . . else not faithful administration but cruel dissipation.’<sup>1</sup>

Therefore, according to the doctrine of St. Bernard, the Pope is bound to consult in all his actions the welfare of the Church, and on that condition he is entitled to do whatever, before God, he deems the best. Does, perhaps, this power appear to be excessive?—But is not this equally the case with every sovereign, yet with this considerable difference that catholic faith, always inseparable from a Pope, lays far more restraints on the jurisdiction of a Pope than the mere conscience of kings does on theirs? It belongs to the very nature of all human laws, however useful and wise at first, to become, under particular circumstances, an obstacle to the welfare of society; and no society whatever can last, unless on condition of possessing an authority entitled to abrogate existing laws whenever they have ceased to be useful. Why, we ask therefore again, should that be denied to the Church, the society of God, which is granted to every society of men—which is, moreover, considered as necessary to the very existence of every human society?

Here, however, we meet the objection which leads us to speak of the Pope’s abuse of power. Who can assure justitiæ est jus cuique servare suum; auferre cuiquam sua, justo quomodo poterit convenire? Erras, si ut summam, ita et solam institutam a Deo vestram apostolicam potestatem existimas. Si hoc sentis ab eo dissentis qui ait: ‘Non est potestas nisi a Deo.’—Ibid. No. 17. p. 768.

<sup>1</sup> Non sum tam rudis ut ignorem positos vos dispensatores, sed in ædificationem, non in destructionem (2 Cor. xiii. 10). Denique quæritur inter dispensatores ut fidelis quis inveniatur (1 Cor. iv. 2). Ubi necessitas urget, excusabilis dispensatio est; ubi utilitas provocat, dispensatio laudabilis est. Utilitas, dico, communis, non propria. Nam cum nihil horum est, non plane fidelis dispensatio, sed crudelis dissipatio est.—Ibid. No. 18, p. 769.

us, we are told, that the Popes would always conform themselves to the doctrine of St. Bernard? How did the Popes behave in many cases? The very language of the holy Doctor to the Pope Eugenius III. shows that there is no security in practice against their abuse of power. Is it to be presumed that an authority which, in many cases, has proved to be what St. Bernard says, 'in destructionem,' has been really appointed by God? Is it not rather to be presumed that God has preferred dividing or sharing the government of the Church among many, in order to prevent the incalculable evils which may impend on the whole Church from a single Pope's malice or incapacity? Such is, in all its strength, the objection. Let us examine it.

First of all, should we take history as a standard for deciding whether monarchy is the form of government more convenient to the Church or not, the answer is evidently enough unfavourable to the assumption that many rulers diminish the evils of the Church. The increased number of rulers has, too often, for its principal effect that of increasing the amount of human passions preventing the right exercise of the supreme authority in society; at any rate the question, if seriously discussed, would lead us again to the poet's above-quoted opinion on forms of government. Should we, moreover, take a glance at the history of the Oriental Orthodox Church, her fortunes are not likely to create any strong persuasion of its being an advantage that the government of the Church should be shared among many, rather than concentrated in the hands of a single Pope.

Setting aside, however, the lessons of history, we prefer answering the objection in a better way. We fairly recognise and plainly admit that abuses of power on the side of the Popes are possible. Baronius' 'Annales Ecclesiastici' bear, should evidence be required, a sad yet undeniable evidence to that possibility. Besides, Saints have acknowledged and Popes have confessed them. Let us, before proceeding, quote an instance proving at once both assertions, as, at a time when the Popes' doctrinal infallibility, when speaking ex cathedrâ, is, even by learned men, so often confused with his impeccability, it is useful, if not even necessary, to point out, on every occasion, how distinct and separate the two things are.

Since St. Bernard, whose words we have quoted above, a long series of saints, both men and women, have acknowledged, like the holy Doctor, the possibility of a Pope's bad administration and abuse of power. Passing by many of them, we shall confine ourselves to quoting an Italian, we mean St. Leonard da Porto-Maurizio (d. 1751). We purposely choose St. Leonard, as he was proclaimed saint by the present Pope, Pius IX. It is Pius IX. who has recently canonised a man who, once preaching in Rome, on the subject of the universal judgment, coming to the separation the angels of God will then make of the elect from the reprobate, did not fail to make the angels begin their separation with the Popes. 'All the Popes,' said St. Leonard, with a liberty which might perhaps be termed rudeness, 'have been called "Holy Father;" all the Popes have been deservedly honoured with prostrations and the title of Most Blessed; but it is indeed a great weight to be answerable for the souls of the whole world; no wonder, therefore, if among many, some Popes, men as they are, will go to the bottom and be declared most unhappy. What shame for that poor Pope! . . .'<sup>1</sup>

We should be happy to find that the same freedom of

<sup>1</sup> 'Questa separazione non è invenzione capricciosa dei predicatori, è Vangelo. Exibunt Angeli et separabunt. Si porterà l'Angelo separatore al luogo dei Papi, et separabit. Tutti i Pontefici furono chiamati padri santi, tutti furono inchinati col titolo di beatissimi meritamente; ma quell'

language has been allowed to Russian orthodox preachers, in reference to the chief of their Church.<sup>1</sup>

Having now stated that Saints have acknowledged and Popes confessed the possibility of abuse of power in a Pope, let us go on to state that no one on earth has

avere a render conto di tutte le anime d' un mondo è pure un gran peso ; nè sarà meraviglia se fra tanti, alcuni come uomini anderanno al fondo, e saranno dichiarati sfortunatissimi. Che confusione di quel povero papa, eh !...—Raccolta delle opere sacro-morali del B. Leonardo da Porto-Maurizio. Venezia, Gius. Antonelli, 1839. T. i. 'Lunedì dopo la prima domen. di Quaresima,' p. 106. 'Del Giudizio universale,' p. 114.

<sup>1</sup> Among the advices given to preachers in the Spiritual Regulation, there is one reminding them that they must not speak of the sins of those who govern. The Russian expression говорить о грѣхахъ властителейъ cannot be translated otherwise. Полн. Собр. 1 ser. tom. vi. Дух. Регл. p. 338, No. 5.

After having quoted the words of St. Leonard da Porto-Maurizio, we cannot indeed refrain from quoting the following ones, dictated by a filial devotion to the Holy Father, as well as by the calm and conscientious conviction of a superior mind. The writer is not an Italian. 'I cannot shut my eyes to the fact,' says Fath. Newman, 'that the Sovereign Pontiffs have a gift, proper to themselves, of understanding what is good for the Church, and what Catholic interests require. And, in the next place, I find that this gift exercises itself in absolute independence of secular politics, and a detachment from every earthly and temporal advantage, and pursues its end by uncommon courses, and by unlikely instruments, and by methods of its own.'—On Universities, p. 222. And again: 'In his (the Pope's) administration of Christ's kingdom, in his religious acts, we must never oppose his will, or dispute his word, or criticise his policy, or shrink from his side . . . . We must never murmur at that absolute rule which the Sovereign Pontiff has over us, because it is given him by Christ, and in obeying him we are obeying Our Lord. We must never suffer ourselves to doubt that, in his government of the Church, he is guided by an intelligence more than human . . . . Even in secular matters it is ever safe to be on his side, dangerous to be on the side of his enemies. Our duty is, not indeed to mix up Christ's Vicar with this or that party of men, because he, in his high station, is above all parties ; but to look at his acts, to follow him whither he goeth, and never to desert him, however he may be tried ; but to defend him at all hazards, and against all comers, as a son would a father, and as a wife a husband, knowing that his cause is the cause of God.'—The Pope and the Revolution, in the Sermons preached on various occasions. London : Burns, Oates & Co., serm. xiv. p. 268.

more constantly and more effectually protested against them than the Popes themselves. And how so? In very many ways, but above all, by what the Popes constantly did in order to maintain, propagate, and increase the worship and love of Jesus Christ. What more eloquent protest against the asserted or supposed abuses of power of the Vicars of Christ than the thought and the sight of our crucified Redeemer? The Popes did not act like that strange reformer of Wittemberg, who, after having, in order to purify the religion of Jesus Christ, abolished confession, religious vows, virginity, fast-days, abstinence, necessity of good works—whatever, in a word, could mortify the corrupted passions of men—abolished also the images, among them the CRUCIFIX<sup>1</sup>—that visible and expressive compendium of the essence of the Gospel;—then proceeding still further, mutilated, so to speak, Jesus Christ himself, by almost exclusively representing him as a Redeemer, too little as a Model. Jesus Christ is both, and the Popes have constantly kept him entire, and constantly presented him entire to the adoration of the world.

This consideration alone (and we pass over many others) might well disarm the passionate and bitter zeal of many adversaries of the Popes. Even to an enemy, if he acknowledges and confesses the injustice of his behaviour, we feel ashamed to say, ‘You were wrong.’ Why should not a similar feeling prevail in our hearts with regard to the Popes; since, even when experiencing the misery and infirmity of our nature, they never cease to say to the world, ‘Your model is Jesus Christ,—on the cross, naked, bleeding, His head crowned with thorns!’

<sup>1</sup> St. Paul found some utility in the representation, by words at least, of the crucifix, when he said, ‘O senseless Galatians, who hath bewitched you, that you should not obey the truth, before whose eyes Jesus Christ hath been set forth (προεγράφη), crucified among you?’ (GALAT. iii. 1.)

Nay, in such circumstances, we need not be afraid of any Pope's abuses of power. They are permitted—they will remain in history as an undeniable argument that it is not to men the Catholic Church is indebted for her existence and triumphs, but to Jesus Christ himself. No Pope, should he even aim at it, would ever be able to cause any real harm to her. And why? Because the Church is the Society of God, and nothing—no man and no angel—can prevail against God. What Jesus Christ was able to say shortly before His passion: "Father, those that thou gavest me I have kept" (John xvii. 12) Jesus Christ will, beyond any doubt, be able to say again, at the end of the world, when His Church, the price of His blood, shall have accomplished the same mission He accomplished during His earthly life. What St. Augustine says with regard to the law of Providence in the general government of the world, that 'God has preferred to draw good out of evil, rather than to prevent evil,' is specially true with regard to the law of Providence in the government of the Church. Nay, God is far more interested than men are, or ever can be, in the welfare of His Church; he has far more at heart than men have or ever can have, the salvation of souls. Hence, what is good for the present existence of the Church is what happens to-day; what is good for her existence to-morrow is what will happen to-morrow; what is good for the whole existence of the Church is what happens, has happened, and will happen to her, down to the end of the world.

And this is as far from fatalism as an ignoble apathy and a selfish indifference for whatever may happen in the world, is far from a filial confidence in the omnipotence and goodness of that FATHER who is in Heaven,—this filial confidence, in fact, does not dispense with the strict obligation in us of loving the Church as our mother, of rejoicing with her and weeping with her—with the obligation, above all, of contributing by all means in our power, at least by our prayers and example, to the welfare of the Church, and, whenever and wherever there is need of it, even to the reform of the Church. Yes, even to her reform. We do not refrain from using this word, as we are well aware that not all Catholics are holy, not all priests, not all religious; not all bishops are saints; just as not all Popes have been Saints. Until this work of sanctification is completed, there will always be some need of reform in the Catholic Church. To all who undertake to co-operate in such reform of the Church, we, as Catholics, owe, and shall always feel, the greatest gratitude, and the more so because we seek—because our soul longs for—the return of the Oriental Orthodox Church to Catholic unity,<sup>1</sup> and by nothing can this return be more effectually promoted than by increasing the sanctity of all Catholics. Yes, let us, with the utmost zeal, promote this reform of the Church, as hardly any other work can be more glorious to God, more useful to the Church, and more salutary to souls.

Now, in the interest of such a holy work, and in that

<sup>1</sup> An Association of Prayers for the return of the Oriental Orthodox Church, and especially of Russia, to Catholic unity, was the dearest wish of an illustrious Russian convert, Count Gregory Schouvaloff (d. April 2, 1859), after he had joined the Congregation of the Barnabites. His brethren in religion have kept up the same idea, and are most desirous of spreading everywhere this Association of Prayers. (See the Appendix.)

F. Schouvaloff used to say—and he has left the same words written in his account of his conversion and vocation: ‘It will not be without a result that the Russians have preserved among the treasures of their faith an intense devotion to Mary. Yes, Mary will be the bond which shall unite the two Churches, and she will make of all those who love her a family of brothers, under the common father, the Vicar of Jesus Christ.’—Ma Conversion et ma Vocation (Paris, Douniol, 1859 and 1864), part ii. § ix.

of the return of the Oriental Orthodox Church to Catholic unity, we beg, before concluding, to suggest the most sure and powerful means for bringing about the most perfect reform in the Catholic Church. It is to imitate the Popes in maintaining, propagating, and increasing the worship and love of our crucified Redeemer, Jesus Christ. This means has immense advantages over every other. First of all, the very speaking of Jesus Christ to the hearts of sinners—let them be laymen or persons consecrated to God—will ensure a marvellous efficacy to our sermons and our tracts. Moreover, in putting forward Jesus Christ, and in asking the conversion of sinners for Jesus' sake, we are not exposed to counteract by our simple presence, or generally by our conduct, the good effect produced by our words, letters, or books. Then, by using this means, we are sure of obtaining abundant encouragements, blessings, and briefs from the Holy See. Finally, and above all, by using this means we are secured from becoming guilty of one of the greatest crimes before God, that of dividing the ONE Church of Jesus Christ, by raising in her dissensions and schisms. Alas! the history of many a pretended reformer of the Church but too clearly contains a hint of Providence, a terrible lesson. St. Paul expressed his fear; 'Ne cum aliis prædicaverim, ipse reprobus efficiar' (1 Cor. ix. 27): 'Lest when he had preached to others he himself should become a reprobate.' Whence is it that many pretended reformers (let the world call them so) have become 'reprobate'? Their intentions, in the beginning, at least, perhaps, were good; the Catholic Church really wanted reform; some of them were even men of self-denial; yet, after having preached to others, they became reprobate! Why? Because no reform can be truly so which is accomplished in the Church by disregarding the hierarchy given by Jesus Christ to His Church. That is not reform which is accomplished by the subversion in the Church of the legitimate powers and the destruction of her order. Whatever reform cannot be obtained but by the illegitimate way of a revolution must be left to God alone; the Church is His. He knows her necessities and how to provide for them, and He is far more willing to do so than men are. The impossibility of men accomplishing such reform without revolution, shows either that the time is not yet come—and God is master of His Church—or that God Himself will directly provide by some miracle, no more difficult for him than the creation of the world.

But never, under any circumstances, can man be allowed to bring about a reform in the Church by which a divine hierarchy should be disregarded, and the powers appointed by God subverted.—‘It is for Truth,’ they will perhaps answer, ‘that we are fighting, and for Truth’s sake even the scandal must be encountered. So we are taught by a true Father and true Doctor of the Catholic Church, St. Jerome.’<sup>1</sup> Well, it is indeed so, and even the author of the ‘Ὁ Συνοδικὸς τόμος ἡ περὶ ἀληθείας’ (‘The Holy Volume, or On Truth’) did not fail to put this sentence on the first page of his work. It is so indeed, and we subscribe to it. Yet, what is Truth?

Some one, more than eighteen centuries ago, put the same question to Jesus Christ. He did not await the answer, but almost immediately afterwards condemned Jesus Christ to death (John xviii. 38).

What is Truth? Some asserted reformer of the Church has, perhaps, also asked Jesus Christ: ‘What is Truth?’ It was an inspiration from Heaven. But he also did not wait for the answer of Jesus Christ. . . .

What is Truth? Truth is something different from our conceptions, from our ideas, from our delusions.

<sup>1</sup> Si ex veritate nascitur scandalum, utilius permittitur nasci scandalum quam veritas amittatur.’

Truth is what is true in itself, the reality of things, and not what we fancy or believe to be true;<sup>1</sup> it is something distinct and separate from our opinion or conviction, something apart and totally independent of the phenomena of the clearness or dulness of our vision; of the shadows which darken its brightness to our eyes, and of the clouds of passion starting up from the heart and enveloping the mind.

No! to these reformers must be applied the words of the Scriptures: 'There was a great overthrow of the people, because they did not hearken to Judas and his brethren, thinking that they should do manfully; but they were not of the seed of those men by whom salvation was brought to Israel' (1 Mach. v. 61, 62).

And if any such exist now in the Church, we beg, with the greatest respect for immortal souls, to lay before them this question: How can you presume to pronounce what is the best for the Church? Are the secrets of souls known to you? and do you know all the effects which are being produced on them by the events now passing in the Church? Or do you forget that the Church has a life which lasts beyond our own, and that events passing to-day in her may be ordained for the salvation of the last generation of men?

<sup>1</sup> Of the just-quoted Doctor are the following words, which well deserve a serious consideration: 'Animales reor esse philosophos qui proprios cogitatus putant esse sapientiam, de quibus recte dicitur: Animalis autem homo non recipit ea quæ sunt spiritus. Stultitia quippe est ei. . . . Quod si (anima) proprio crediderit cogitatui, et absque gratia Spiritus Sancti invenire se aestimaverit veritatem, quasi aurum sordidum animalis hominis appellatione signatur.'—Comment. in Epist. ad Galat. lib. iii. cap. v. 17; Migne, Patrolog. curs. compl. ser. i. tom. xxvi. ; Scti. Hieronymi, tom. vii, pp. 411, 412.

POSTSCRIPT.

As we are concluding this book, we are irresistibly struck by the analogy, as to their form of government, which exists between the Anglican Church and the different branches of the Oriental Orthodox Church, especially the State Church of Russia. In England, too, the bishops are not the supreme authority of the Church; the Church of England, too, is constituted into a Papacy like that of Russia, with this difference, however, that of the three powers possessed by the Pope of Rome—that of order, the doctrinal power, and the power of jurisdiction—the chief of the Church of England has exercised the two last, whilst the Tsar has as yet exercised only the last. The Church of England, too, is liable to enslavement and revolutions.

Besides, the declaration of His Majesty King James I. concerning the Thirty-nine 'Articles agreed upon by the Archbishops and Bishops of both provinces, and the whole clergy, in the convocation holden at London in the year 1562, for the avoiding of diversities of opinions, and for the establishing of consent touching true religion,' reprinted by His Majesty's commandment, with his royal declaration, and prefixed to the said Articles in the Book of Common Prayer, has features strikingly analogous to Peter the Great's ukase of January 25, 1721, for the establishment of the Synod. And the previous ratification by Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth to the Thirty-nine Articles reads almost literally like Peter the Great's ratification of the 'Spiritual Regulation.'

After this, one might imagine, from the additional circumstance of our having written this book in English, that we have had in view the State Church of England rather than the Oriental Orthodox Church.

For this we are not answerable.

APPENDIX TO THE SECOND EDITION.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTES.

- I. Of the different powers of the Pope.
- II. Of the Popes' abuses of power.
- III. On the same subject as connected with the divinely instituted jurisdiction of the Bishops (Extracts from the work of Gregory XVI., Il Trionfo della Santa Sede.)
- IV. Conscience and obedience to the Pope.

SOME DOCUMENTS

Concerning the "Association of prayers, in honour of Mary Immaculate, for the return of the Greek-Russian Church to Catholic unity."

- I. Brief of the Holy Father of April 30, 1872, with the annexed Remarks.
- II. Diploma for the communication of the Plenary Indulgence granted in the above brief.
- III. Prayer, O Mary, Immaculate Virgin, enriched with Indulgences.
- IV. Another prayer to Mary (Full of confidence), entirely composed of texts taken from the Greek-Slavonian liturgy.
- V. The same with the corresponding liturgical texts in the original Greek and remarks.
- VI. Approbations granted to this "Association of prayers" by English Bishops.
- VII. Declaration of the General Father of the Barnabites, for facilitating the spreading of this "Association of Prayers."

ADDITIONAL NOTES.

---

I.

OF THE DIFFERENT POWERS OF THE POPE.

See pp. 125—128.

IN strict theological language, as used in all classical works of Catholic theology, the powers of the Pope are divided into POWER of ORDER (potestas ordinis) and POWER of JURISDICTION (potestas jurisdictionis), this latter being again subdivided into the power of teaching (potestas magisterii), and the power of administering the Church (potestas regiminis). (See Murray, &c.). Hence it follows that jurisdiction properly so called, comprehends both the power of teaching and that of administering the Church.

As our book is destined for general perusal, we have deemed it expedient to employ the word "jurisdiction" in the meaning it suggests to the mind in ordinary conversation; that is, as expressing the mere power of administering the church, the mere potestas regiminis. This remark will prevent the reader, well versed in theological discussions, from mistaking the meaning of any of our propositions.

We will add here that what we have named the "jurisdiction over the universal Church," exercised by the Cardinals during the vacancy of the Holy See (p. 126), is so limited that, according to some authors, it can hardly be named jurisdiction even in the sense of "potestas regiminis." At any rate it can by no means be compared with the potestas regiminis as fully exercised by the Pope.

---

II.

OF THE POPES' ABUSES OF POWER.

See pp. 172 et seq.

WE need scarcely point out that no serious reader will find an objection to any authority whatever, in the mere fact of the abuses emanating from those who are entrusted with it. This is especially true with regard to the Church, because the Church is a society equally supernatural in her origin, in her end, and in the means she employs for attaining it. If the form of government best suited for a society is the one best calculated to attain the end of its institution, is it not from God, and from God alone, that we may learn the best form of government of the Church, the society of God? Resting on this principle we fear nothing that might be urged against the divine authority of the Church, taken from the personal acts of the Popes; we only ask that historical truth be philosophically searched after and religiously adhered to.

However great may be the attachment of Catholics to the Popes, no one, to our knowledge, ever dreamed of their having received that kind of eighth sacrament for the fulfilment of their great vocation, invented by the Russian Church for the Tsars, a belief which, under pain of anathema, she imposes upon her members.

Every Pope carries to the pontifical throne the qualities, good and bad, which were peculiar to him at the time of his election to the pontificate. There have been Popes who constantly strove to advance in holiness; others seem to have carried their defects to the grave. The personal character of each Pope, the circle in which he lived, the various degrees of intelligence, of learning, of prudence, of tact in the conduct of affairs, of penetration, of firmness, and finally of piety, give to the pontificate of each Pope a distinctive mark which is peculiar to itself, even independently of external circumstances. In the eyes of none but a superficial observer is one Pope the mere reproduction of another, and the successor of Pius IX. will have his own peculiar stamp which will distinguish him from that extraordinary Pontiff. Grace aids and perfects nature, but does not force it; therefore we need not be astonished if, among the great number of Popes, there should have been some who were not always inspired with the purest zeal for the glory of God. It is in this sense that we admit that there have been, and there yet may be, Popes capable of abusing their power under certain circumstances.

Yet, after having conceded all that truth demands on the subject of the possibility of abuses of power on the part of the Popes, we now owe it to the truth to ask what line of sovereigns can be compared to the long line of the Popes, whether for the practical wisdom they have shown in the government of the Church, for the virtues of which they have been models, the moderation with which they have exercised their power, or finally for the relatively small proportion of those unfaithful to their mission.

We owe it equally to the truth not to admit, without proofs, that in the general government of the Church, the Popes have passed the limits of their authority. Two Popes there were who, above all, were considered the personification of pontifical ambition; historians seemed to vie with each other in the pleasing task of blackening their memory, and presenting them as despots recognizing no other limits to their power than their own good pleasure. These were Gregory VII. and Innocent III. Within our own time two splendid vindications of these two Popes have appeared. Who are they who have thus vindicated these Popes from the reproach of ambition and despotism? Two Protestants.* So great is the power of truth! And what has been done in regard to Gregory VII. and Innocent III., has been done also in regard to many other Popes; even several statements of Baronius have been acknowledged as too harsh, and resting on no firm historical basis.

* VOIGT (J) Hil'ebbrand als Papst Gregorius VII. und sein Zeitalter. HURTER (Fred.) Geschichte Papst Innocenz III. und seiner Zeitgenossen.—It is well known that the historical researches required for the execution of this work led Prof. Hurter to embrace Catholicism.

"No Pope," we have said (p. 177), "should he even aim at it, would ever be able to cause any real harm to the Church." By such an impossible hypothesis we have only expressed our confidence in God's supernatural guidance of His Church. We add here, that the more history is thoroughly studied and fairly questioned by men capable of transporting themselves, as it were, into the very midst of the epoch in which one Pope's activity had exerted itself, the more justice will be done, not only to God's aid to His Vicars, but also to the Popes' virtues and merits.

Before concluding this note concerning the Pope, we must state that, by what we have said at p. 167, "The monarchical form of government of the Church and the designation of the Bishop of Rome as her visible head constitute two articles of the Catholic faith," &c., we do not interfere with the discussion as to how far the jurisdiction of the Bishops, regarded not as individual but as a whole, flows from the Pope. Both powers are from God.—Likewise we do not intend to brand with any censure of our own the opinion (Soto, Bañes, etc.) that a Pope might transfer to another See the primacy and its rights now attached to the See of Rome. This proposition has been condemned by Pius IX. in his Apostolic Letters, Ad Apostolicæ Sedis, of Aug. 22, 1851; moreover, it has been inserted in the Syllabus (Prop. XXXV.) as one of those to which the Pope called the Bishops' special attention. Yet, as no particular degree of censure (nota) has been attached to this proposition, we will abstain from determining it ourselves. A divine wisdom always rules the acts of the Church, both when she does anything and when she abstains from doing.

III.

ON THE SAME SUBJECT AS CONNECTED WITH THE DIVINELY INSTITUTED JURISDICTION OF THE BISHOPS.

From the work of Gregory XVI. : Il Trionfo della Santa Sede.
Discorso preliminare. § 63.

That the abuses which might exist in the monarchy of the Pope do not destroy his divine right.

"THERE are modern Jeremiahs who are inconsolable on the subject of usurpations. Looking on such drawbacks as the consequences and necessary effect of the monarchical power, they imagine a system in which, according to them, whilst doing away with despotism, they substitute the true idea of the primitive institution. The Pope, thus they reason, unjustly deposes a Bishop, restrains too rigorously episcopal rights, makes himself the judge in many causes which should be heard and decided by the local Bishop. Hence come many disorders: and these abuses war against the good of the Church: therefore the Pope should be denied this authority. Such is approximatively their line of arguments. Let us hear how Ballerini answers it. "If because of these abuses," he says, "the legitimacy itself of the power should be denied, who does not see that every power, both papal and episcopal, ordinary and delegate, should then be denied, because of the many abuses which through the malice of men defile all sorts of power?"* The good which results for the Church from the supreme authority of the Pope amply compensates for the evil which may creep in through abuses, that authority having been instituted in order to watch over the conduct of the body of the faithful and the Bishops themselves, who otherwise would have no one to fear. The intolerance of the Innovators is doubly condemnable, for, on the pretext of saving the Church from the alleged abuses of power, they expose her to irreparable ruin, wresting from the hands of her Head the arms destined to defend and protect her. Let the words of Tacitus be recollected: "Just as you bear," so says the pagan historian, "with excessive rain and other natural evils, so bear also with the luxury and ambition of your governors. As long as there are men there will be vices. These, however, will not be uninterrupted; moreover they are compensated by the intervention of the good."†

We have said "irreparable ruin," and purposely. In fact, besides that the Church is not always congregated to examine and pronounce upon the causes of Bishops, extend or restrain their rights according to various and numerous circumstances, even when thus assembled she is liable to be induced, through various interests, to suspend opportune remedy and necessary reform. And to this bear witness the adversaries themselves when explaining in their way the great extension of the pontifical power which, according to them, must be attributed to the Church not having opposed it in time, at the Council of Trent.

It is also evident that if it be admitted, as the Innovators do,‡ that Sovereigns have the right to revise, approve and condemn the decrees of an Œcumenical Council concerning the discipline, the reform and the general external policy of the Church, the sole protection of a Court might well suffice to prevent the condemnation of a Bishop, or any other delinquent, and save him from canonical penalties. The same protection would equally suffice to release the Bishops of a whole State from any such decrees which the

* Si ob hosce abusos neganda esset potestas utut legitima, quis non videret negandam esse potestatem tum pontificiam, tum episcopalem, tum ordinariam, tum delegatam, quæ ex hominum sive fragilitate sive malitia multis inficiuntur abusibus.—BALLERINI, Vindiciæ auctoritatis Pontificiæ contra Febronium, c. 4. n. 9.

† "Quomodo sterilitatem aut nimios imbres et cætera naturæ mala, ita luxum vel avaritiam dominantium tolerate. Vitia erunt donec homines, sed neque hæc continua, et meliorum interventu pensantur."—TACITUS, Hist. l. 4. c. 74, n. 4.

‡ Reflessioni di un Fiorentino canonico in occasione dell' assemblea di Firenze.

Council might issue for the purpose of putting some limits to their discretionary power. And if this can happen with regard to the disciplinary decrees of Œcumenical Councils, how much more readily governments would behave in the same way with regard to provincial or any other particular Councils ?

Idem. § 64.

From the fact that the Pope is a real monarch, it does not necessarily follow that the Bishops are simply his Vicars.

"SHALL the Bishops, therefore, be simply Vicars and lieutenants of the Pope, as the governors of cities are of their sovereigns ? Not so ; this is not a consequence of the papal monarchy, but solely the result of imagination. "If it does not please you," says Spedalieri, "to consider the Bishops as the lieutenants of the Pope, this matters little, provided you allow that, according to the divine institution, every Bishop in the exercise of his jurisdiction is subject to the Bishop of Rome in virtue of the latter's supremacy : and that this subordination is essential to the form of government instituted by Christ ; without this there can be no true unity, and the inconveniences that are hinted above cannot be removed."*

Who ever dreamt that the monarchical form of government of the Church, excluded the divine institution and jurisdiction of Bishops ? This is a most evident error, since they both tend to the attainment of the same end for which this same episcopal authority was ordained, namely, the good administration of the whole Church.

Let us hear again Ballerini giving us the true notion of the tendency towards unity, and explaining why the authority ought to be supreme in the Pope and subordinate in the Bishops : "The Supreme Pontiff," he says, "can do everything in the government of the Church, but on the condition that the exercise of this power be to the edification of the Church and not to her destruction. Bishoprics have been instituted for the edification of the Church, and each of these has been provided with a Bishop that the latter might thus with greater vigilance and facility watch over the flock entrusted to him. In fact one single Bishop would have been unable to give the same attention to all Churches, and on the other hand dissensions and divisions prejudicial to the most necessary unity and peace of the Church were to be feared if many Bishops, invested with equal power, had been charged with the care of governing the whole Church. In order, then, to prevent dissensions arising between Bishops equal in power and subject to no one, and again to prevent any of them thus using his episcopal authority that he might through his actions or omissions injure the welfare and unity of the Church, it was necessary there should be some one to whom they should all be subject, and who had supreme authority over them, to prevent dissensions among them, and to keep them all in unity and in the fulfilment of their duties. Moreover, that submission necessary for the edification of the Church required that the one who by right was superior to them all, should have over them such power as to enable him to do whatever was expedient for the edification of the Church.*

* SPEDALIERI. Diritti dell' uomo, lib. 6. c. 5. § 12.

But it sometimes happens that the good of the Church requires her to augment, to limit, or to restrain the exercise by the Bishops of their rights. In such cases the Roman Pontiff can augment, limit, or restrain their powers, without in any way opposing or denying their divine institution and authority, for in so doing he would be conforming himself to the divinely ordained plan of ecclesiastical government."—Il Trionfo della Santa Sede, opera di D. MAURO CAPELLARI, monaco Camaldolese, ora GREGORIO XVI. sommo Pontefice. Napoli, 1834, vol. i. p. 133, et seq.

IV.

CONSCIENCE AND OBEDIENCE TO THE POPE.

As connected with the subject of the Popes' abuse of power, we are glad to add here a page taken from F. Newman's last publication. It concerns the somewhat hypothetical case of collisions between conscience and the authority of the Pope; a case, the mere thought of which had, in several countries, the power of exciting the public mind like a national calamity.

"When I speak of Conscience," says F. Newman, "I mean conscience truly so called. When it has the right of opposing the supreme, though not infallible Authority of the Pope, it must be something more than that miserable counterfeit which, as I have said above, now goes by the name. If in a particular case it is to be taken as a sacred and sovereign monitor, its dictate, in order to prevail against the voice of the Pope, must follow upon serious thought, prayer, and all available means of arriving at a right judgment on the matter in question. And further, obedience to the Pope is what is called 'in possession,' that is, the onus probandi of establishing a case against him lies, as in all cases of exception, on the side of conscience. Unless a man is able to say to himself, as in the presence of God, that he must not, and dare not, act upon the Papal injunction, he is bound to obey it, and would commit a great sin in disobeying it. Primâ facie, it is his bounden duty, even from a sentiment of loyalty, to believe the Pope right and to act accordingly. He must vanquish that mean, ungenerous, selfish, vulgar spirit of his nature, which, at the very first rumour of a command, places itself in opposition to the Superior who gives it, asks itself whether he is not exceeding his right, and rejoices, in a moral and practical matter, to commence with scepticism. He must have no wilful determination to exercise a right of thinking, saying, doing just what he pleases, the question of truth and falsehood, right and wrong, the duty if possible of obedience, the love of speaking as his Head speaks, and of standing in all cases on his Head's side, being simply discarded. If this necessary rule were observed, collisions between the Pope's authority and the authority of conscience would be very rare. On the other hand, in the fact that, after all, in extraordinary cases, the conscience of each individual is free, we have a safeguard and security, were security necessary (which is a most gratuitous supposition), that no Pope ever will be able, as the objection supposes, to create a false conscience for his own ends."—NEWMAN. A Letter addressed to His Grace the Duke of Norfolk on occasion of Mr. Gladstone's recent Expostulation, § 5, No. 4. p. 63—64.

* "Potest omnia summus Pontifex in Ecclesiæ regimine, sed ea conditione, ut hujus potestatis usus in ædificationem Ecclesiæ sit, et non in destructionem. In ædificationem Ecclesiæ erecti episcopatus, et in his constituti fuerunt Episcopi, ut quisque vigilantius et facilius suo gregi prospiceret; nam nec unus potuisset ex æquo omnibus Ecclesiis curam præstare, nec plures simul æquali potestate omnibus consulere absque periculo dissensionum et scissurarum, quæ unitatem et pacem Ecclesiæ maxime necessariam turbassent. Ne autem inter Episcopos æquali potestate Ecclesiis præfectos, si nemini fuissent subordinati, orirentur dissidia, aut in usu facultatum episcopalium quispiam committeret vel omitteret, quod bono Ecclesiæ unitatique præjudicio esset; uni, qui omnis summa auctoritate præset, ita erant subijciendi, ut omnes in officio et unitate continerent, scissurasque impediret: hæcque subordinatio in ædificationem Ecclesiæ necessaria exigebat ut his præpositus omnibus jure primatus posset supra eosdem Episcopos omnia quæ in ædificationem Ecclesiæ conferrent."—BALLERINI, op. cit. c. 3. n. 10.

If we do not mistake, it is rare to meet with pages on the Pope which, like this, win the adhesion of both reason and heart, impose themselves on the conscience, and give thus to the spirit of submission to the Pope the stability and characteristic of a deep conviction.

SOME DOCUMENTS

CONCERNING THE

"ASSOCIATION OF PRAYERS IN HONOUR OF MARY IMMACULATE, FOR THE RETURN OF THE GREEK-RUSSIAN CHURCH TO CATHOLIC UNITY."

---

N.B. An historical account of this "Association of Prayers," will be found in a separate Essay of ours, bearing the title, La prière et l'appui du St. Siège et de l'Épiscopat dans l'œuvre de la réunion des Églises. It is appended to the French edition of this work: Le Pape de Rome et les Papes de l'Eglise orthodoxe d'Orient, (Paris, Plon, 1875), and is also printed separately.

---

I.

BRIEF OF HIS HOLINESS PIUS IX., GRANTING A PLENARY INDULGENCE TO THOSE WHO ASSIST AT THE MASS CELEBRATED FOR THE RETURN OF THE GREEK-RUSSIAN CHURCH TO CATHOLIC UNITY.

PIUS PP. IX.

AD PERPETUAM REI MEMORIAM.

Expositum nuper Nobis fuit, in Ecclesia Collegii Clericorum Regularium Sancti Pauli Decollati, Barnabitæ qui nominantur, civitatis Parisiensis, primo singulorum mensium Sabbatho pium quoddam exercitium in honorem Beatæ Mariæ Virginis Immaculatæ fieri solere ad impetrandam Ejus meritis et intercessione a Domino Nostro Jesu Christo, unitatis fidei charitatisque Fundatore, societati Græcorum schismaticorum gratiam redeundi in communionem cum hac Sancta Apostolica Sede, et supplicatum hu-

PIUS IX., POPE.

FOR A PERPETUAL MEMORY OF THE THING.

We have been lately informed that on every first Saturday of each month, in the Church of the Congregation of Regular Clerks of St. Paul, called Barnabites, at Paris, a certain pious devotion is practised in honour of the Blessed Mary, the Immaculate Virgin, in order that through her merits and intercession, our Lord Jesus Christ, the Founder of union in faith and charity, may grant to all in the Greek schism the grace to reenter into the communion of this Holy Apostolic See.

Humble supplications have

militer Nobis fuit, ut Fidelibus, qui pio hujusmodi exercitio non modo in dicta Ecclesia, sed et in aliis, ubi fieri velit, operam dederint, spiritualium gratiarum munera impertiri de Apostolica Nostra Auctoritate dignemur; Nos ad augendam Fidelium Religionem et animarum salutem cœlestibus Ecclesiæ thesauris pia charitate intenti piis hujusmodi votis obsecundare volentes, omnibus et singulis utriusque sexus Christianis vere pœnitentibus et confessis, ac sacra Communione refectis, qui præfato pio exercitio in supradicta Ecclesia de Ordinarii licentia peragendo, in Festivitate Conceptionis Beatæ Mariæ Virginis Immaculatæ et primo cujusque mensis Sabbato devote interfuerint, memoratam Ecclesiam visitaverint, et ibi pro Christianorum Principum concordia, hæresum extirpatione, ac sanctæ Matris Ecclesiæ exaltatione pias ad Deum preces effuderint, quo die prædictorum id egerint, Plenariam omnium peccatorum suorum Indulgentiam et remissionem, quam etiam animabus Christifidelium, quæ Deo in charitate conjunctæ ab hac luce migraverint, per modum suffragii applicare possint, misericorditer in Domino concedimus. Præterea, quod in uberius Fidelium spirituale commodum cedat, ut in quavis ex Ecclesiis a Præposito Generali Clericorum Regularium supradictæ Congregationis nunc et pro tempore existente, et ejus Præposito Provinciali ab eodem deputando ad præfatum exercitium de respectivorum also been addressed to us, that by virtue of our Apostolic Authority, we would deign to bestow the favour of spiritual graces on the faithful assisting at this pious devotion not only in the said Church, but in every other where they would wish to establish it. We, who have in view while we distribute with pious liberality the heavenly treasures of the Church, the promotion of the piety of the faithful and the salvation of souls, are very willing to grant these pious desires; wherefore to all and each of the faithful of both sexes, every time that truly repentant and having approached the Sacrament of Penance and received Holy Communion, they shall assist on the Feast of the Immaculate Conception, or the first Saturday of any month at the aforesaid pious devotion, established with the consent of the Ordinary in the aforesaid Church of the Barnabite Fathers at Paris, and, as they visit the Church, shall pray there devoutly for peace among Christian princes, for the extirpation of heresies, and the exaltation of our holy Mother the Church, on whatever day of the aforesaid they shall do this, we grant mercifully in the Lord a Plenary Indulgence and remission of all their sins; which Indulgence will be applicable by way of suffrage to the souls of the faithful who have departed this life united to God by charity. Moreover, in order that the faithful may draw from it the most abundant spiritual advantages, by virtue of our Apostolic authority, we grant also, that all and each of the faithful Ordinariorum licentia peragendum designandis, omnes et singuli Christifideles, diebus ab iisdem Ordinariis statuendis, dummodo supra injuncta pietatis opera rite adimpleverint eandem Plenariam Indulgentiam, libere ac licite lucrari, atque ut supra Fidelibus Defunctis applicare possint et valeant, Auctoritate Nostra Apostolica tribuimus et impertimur.

In contrarium facientibus non obstantibus quibuscunque; Præsentibus perpetuis futuris temporibus valituris. Volumus autem, ut præsentium Litterarum transumptis seu exemplis, etiam impressis, manu alicujus Notarii publici subscriptis, et sigillo personæ in ecclesiastica dignitate constitutæ munitis, eadem prorsus fides adhibeatur, quæ adhiberetur ipsis præsentibus, si forent exhibitæ vel ostensæ.

Datum Romæ apud Sanctum Petrum, sub annulo Piscatoris, die xxx Aprilis MDCCCLXXII. Pontificatus Nostri anno vigesimo sexto.

Subscriptus : N. Card. PARACIANI CLARELLI.

of both sexes, on the days fixed by the Ordinary and by performing the works of piety prescribed above, may gain the same Plenary Indulgence, equally applicable to the souls in purgatory, in any Church, appointed for this, with the consent of the respective Ordinaries, either by the Superior-General of the same Congregation, or by the Superior-Provincial delegated by him.

Notwithstanding whatever may appear to oppose it, let the present Letters have their value for all future time. We wish that there be given to the copies, or exemplars of these Letters, even printed, signed by the hand of a public notary, and having attached the seal of some person of Ecclesiastical dignity, the very same faith as would be given to the present Letters if they were brought forward or shown.

Given at Rome, at St. Peter's, under the seal of the Fisherman, the 30th April, 1872, the twenty-sixth year of our Pontificate.

Signed : N. Card. PARACIANI CLARELLI.

ADNOTATIONES.

Ne quis dubius hæreat in superius descripto Brevi Apostolico interpretando, habitis etiam ad hoc antea opportunis declarationibus, omnia et singula heic ordine enucleanda esse ducimus quæ statuta sunt; tum ut pia hujusmodi Precum Sodalitas novis incrementis in dies augeatur, cum etiam ut luculentius appareat, sub quibus legibus Christifideles impertitas Indulgentias lucrari valeant.

REMARKS.

In order that no difficulty may arise in the interpretation of the above Brief, it has been thought fit to add the following remarks, founded upon declarations of competent authorities. They will promote the diffusion of this pious Association of prayers, and at the same time make the conditions on which the faithful can gain the Indulgences granted to it more clearly known.

1.

Pia Sodalitas Precum pro re-
ditu Ecclesiæ Græco-Ruthenæ
ad catholicam unitatem posita est sub speciali tutela BEATÆ MARIE VIRGINIS IMMACULATÆ, ut Ejus meritis et intercessione, tot centena hominum millia, præsertim in vastissima Russici Imperii ditione, a mystico Ecclesiæ corpore sejuncta, ad ipsius Catholicæ Ecclesiæ sinum revertantur.

2.

Pium exercitium cui plenaria Indulgentia est adnexa, omnino constat (prout in supplici libello de quo in Brevi fit men-tio expressum est), Sacrosancto Missæ Sacrificio quod, stata hora, fit et applicatur pro re-
ditu Ecclesiæ Græco-Ruthenæ
ad catholicam unitatem :

(a) In Festo CONCEPTIONIS
IMMACULATÆ BEATÆ MARIE
VIRGINIS :

(b) Semel in mense : in Ec-clesia quidem Barnabitarum
Parisiis, primo cujusque mensis Sabbato ; in cæteris vero Ec-clesiis, ubi de Ordinariis licentia peragitur, qualibet die mensis ab iisdem Ordinariis statuenda, majori Ecclesiarum et Fidelium commodo.

Aliud quodcumque pium exercitium, (sicuti benedictio SS.
Sacramenti quæ in Ecclesia Barnabitarum Parisiis post Mis-sam impertitur), utcumque conveniens, nullimode tamen requiritur pro lucranda Plenaria Indulgentia.

1.

The pious "Association of prayers for the return of the Greek-Russian Church to Catholic unity," is placed under the special patronage of the BLESSED AND IMMACULATE VIRGIN MARY, in order that, through her merits and intercession, so many millions of souls, especially in the vast empire of Russia, now separated from the mystic body of the Church, may return to the bosom of the Catholic Church.

2.

The pious exercise to which the Plenary Indulgence is attached consists only (according to the tenor of the petition mentioned by the Brief) in the most holy Sacrifice of the Mass offered and applied at a fixed hour, for the return of the Greek-Russian Church to Catholic unity:

(a) On the Feast of the IM-MACULATE CONCEPTION of the BLESSED VIRGIN MARY.

(b) Once a month. In the Church of the Barnabite Fathers at Paris, the first Saturday of each month (at nine o'clock).
In other churches on any day of the month, as the Bishops shall appoint, to suit the convenience of the churches and the faithful.

Any other exercise of piety (such as Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament, which is given after this Mass in the Church of the Barnabite Fathers at Paris), however desirable, is in no wise required for gaining the Plenary Indulgence.

3.

Omnes et singuli utriusque sexus Christifideles, devote adstantes, diebus prædictis, Sacrosancto Missæ Sacrificio, quod fit pro reditu Ecclesiæ Græco-Ruthenæ ad Catholicam unitatem, toties Plenariam Indulgentiam lucrari et etiam animabus in Purgatorio degentibus applicare libere et licite possunt, dummodo vere pœnitentes et confessi, ac Sacra Communionem refecti, (vel in ipsa Missa communicantes), pro Christianorum Principum concordia, hæresum extirpatione, ac Sanctæ Matris Ecclesiæ exaltatione pias preces effuderint.

3.

All the faithful of both sexes who assist on the aforesaid days at the Mass celebrated for the return of the Greek-Russian Church to Catholic unity, can gain the Plenary Indulgence, applicable to the souls in purgatory, each time, provided that truly repentant, and having confessed and received holy communion, (or receiving it at this Mass), they pray for concord among Christian princes the extirpation of heresies, and the exaltation of our holy Mother the Church.

4.

Ad præfatam Plenariam Indulgentiam lucrandam, necesse non est ut qui mane pio exercitio interfuerunt, iterum eodem die Ecclesiam visitent.

4.

For gaining the said Indulgence it is not necessary that those who have assisted at the Mass visit the Church again on the same day.

5.

Parochi, Ecclesiarum Regularium Præpositi alique, sub quocumque nomine veniant, Ecclesiarum Rectores, ex quavis catholici orbis regione, qui, animarum zelo succensi, pium exercitium in suis Ecclesiis, de respectivorum Ordinariorum licentia, peragere desiderant, ad Præpositum Generalem Congregationis Clericorum Regularium Barnabitarum, Romæ degentem Via Tata Giovanni, No. 20A, vel ad Præpositum Provinciale in Gallia, Parisiis (rue de Monceau, n° 64), perscribere poterunt; qui quidem libentissimis animis Diploma communicationis Indulgentiarum pio operi concessarum transmittendum curabunt. (Vide infra, No. II.)

5.

Parish priests, Superiors of religious houses, and other Rectors of Churches under any title, no matter what country they may be of, who full of zeal for souls desire to establish in their respective churches, with the consent of the Bishop, the said pious devotion may apply to the Superior General of the Barnabite Fathers, (Via Tata Giovanni, No. 20A, Rome), or to the Superior Provincial of France at Paris, (rue de Monceau, No. 64), who will most willingly undertake to transmit to them the diploma of communication of the Indulgences attached to this work of piety. (See farther on, No. II.)

6.

Notandum, denique, quod cum Plenaria Indulgentia pio exercitio, toties quoties id peragitur, sit adnexa, non ea conditio ecclesiis imponitur ut onus sive perpetuum sive ad annum suscipiant, Missam videlicet (de qua in No. 2) celebrandi. Si uno, item, alterove mense vel in festo CONCEPTIONIS IMMACULATÆ BEATÆ MARIE VIRGINIS, pium exercitium peragi nequeat, fideles quidem occasione Plenariam Indulgentiam lucrandi tunc frustrantur; non ideo tamen ecclesiæ quibus Indulgentiæ fuerunt semel communicatæ suum in futurum privilegium amittent.

6.

Lastly, it must be remarked that the Plenary Indulgence being attached to the pious exercise every time it takes place, it is not asked, as a necessary condition that the churches take on themselves any engagement either perpetual, or for a year, with regard to the celebration of the Mass, of which mention is made in No. 2. And in like manner, if, on some one or other month, or even on the feast of the IMMACULATE CONCEPTION, it should be impossible to have this holy exercise, the faithful would indeed lose that occasion of gaining the Plenary Indulgence, but the churches to which the Indulgences have been once communicated, would not thereby lose their privilege for the future.

II.

DIPLOMA FOR THE COMMUNICATION OF THE PLENARY INDULGENCE GRANTED IN THE ABOVE BRIEF.

(See Remark No. 5, and farther on the Declaration of the General Father of the Barnabites, No. VII., p. 205).

D. IOSEPHUS MARIA ALBINI

CONGREGATIONIS CLERICORUM REGULARIUM SANCTI PAULI, VULGO
BARNABITARUM

PRÆPOSITUS GENERALIS

UNIVERSIS AD QUOS HÆ LITTERÆ PERVENERINT
SALUTEM IN DOMINO.

Inclty Gentium Apostoli Patroni atque Ducis nostri vestigiis inhærentes, qui omnibus omnia factus, græcis ac barbaris, sapientibus et insipientibus debitorem se professus, per nomen Domini Jesu Christi obtestatus est ne sint schismata in Ecclesia Dei, sed omnes perfecti in eodem sensu et in eadem sententia idipsum dicamus; quantum in Nobis est proximorum saluti subvenire cupientes, adhibitis etiam aliis qui una simul nobiscum validius id præstent, fuis ad Deum precibus, satagimus ut innumeræ prope animæ pretioso Christi sanguine redemptæ, relicto diuturno Græcorum schismate, ad ipsum Pastorum Principem se convertant, si quando salutaria vitæ pascua inveniant, et fiat tandem unum ovile et unus Pastor. Quapropter enixis precibus a Romana Beati Petri Sede, veritatis columna et firmamento, humiliter postulavimus, ut quod pium exercitium, in honorem BEATÆ MARIÆ VIRGINIS IMMACULATÆ, quæ serpentis caput virgineo pede contrivit, cunctasque prorsus hæreses in universo mundo sola interemit, in ecclesia nostra Sancti Pauli Lutetiæ Parisiorum iam institutum et invecum semel in mense haberi solet, Sacrosanctum videlicet Missæ Sacrifcium celebrando, ut sectatores Ecclesiæ Græco-Ruthenæ ad unitatem Ecclesiæ Catholicæ redeuntes ad ejusdem amantissimæ Matris sinum, aspirante Dei gratia, reducantur; idipsum auctoritate Apostolica nedum firmare, munire atque Ecclesiæ thesauris ac muneribus benigne ditare, sed et ad quaslibet ecclesias, quæ idem præstare discuperent, extendere dignaretur.

Nunc vero, quum ad augendam Fidelium religionem et animarum salutem procurandam Sanctissimus Dominus noster PIUS PAPA IX, supplicationibus hujusmodi ac votis inclinatus, per suas Litteras in forma Brevis sub annulo Piscatoris ad Nos datas die XXX. mens. Aprilis an. MDCCCLXXXII. benigne concesserit atque indulserit, ut omnes et singuli Christifideles vere pœnitentes et confessi, ac sacra Communionem refecti, qui tam in prædicta ecclesia Sancti Pauli Parisiis, quam in aliis ubilibet a Nobis designandis, in Festo CONCEPTIONIS IMMACULATÆ B. MARIÆ VIRGINIS quotannis recurrente, et semel in mense, præfato exercitio de Ordinariorum licentia peragendo devote interfuerint et insimul pro Christianorum Principum concordia, hæresum extirpatione, ac Sanctæ Matris Ecclesiæ exaltatione pias preces effuderint, Plenariam toties suorum peccatorum Indulgentiam ac remissionem lucrari atque etiam animabus defunctorum Fidelium applicare possint et valeant: Nos ideo pii voti compotes facti, spiritualia Dei dona fidelibus fideliter ministrare cupientes, innixi facultatibus ex Apostolico Brevi superius memorato tributis, Plenarias hujusmodi Indulgentias et privilegia, præsentis Diplomate, ecclesiæ (N. N.) extendimus libenterque communicamus, ea tamen lege, ut de Ordinarii licentia ac permissione (quemadmodum in Apostolico Brevi cautum est) Sacrosanctum Missæ Sacrificium, diebus prædictis, pro reditu Ecclesiæ Græco-Ruthenæ ad catholicam unitatem celebretur, omniaque quæ ad lucandas hujusmodi Indulgentias præscripta sunt, a Christifidelibus peragantur et fiant.—Datum. etc.

III.

PRAYER TO MARY IMMACULATE TO OBTAIN THE RETURN OF THE GREEK-RUSSIAN CHURCH TO CATHOLIC UNITY.

O Maria, Vergine Immacolata, noi vostri servi, e figli della Santa Chiesa Cattolica Romana, pieni di fiducia nel vostro potente patrocinio, Vi supplichiamo umilmente a voler implorare dal Divino Spirito, per onore e gloria della sua eterna processione dal Padre e dal Figliuolo, l'abbondanza de' suoi doni in favore dei nostri traviati fratelli i Greci scismatici; affinché, rischiarati dalla sua grazia vivificante rientrano nel seno della Chiesa Catto-

O Mary, Immaculate Virgin, we who are thy servants and children of the Holy Catholic and Roman Church, full of confidence in thy powerful protection, humbly pray Thee to implore from the Holy Ghost, for the honour and glory of His eternal procession from the Father and the Son, the abundance of His gifts in behalf of our wandering brethren the Greek Schismatics, to the end that enlightened by His quickenlica sotto la condotta infallibile* ing grace, they may return to the bosom of the Catholic Church under the infallible guidance* of her supreme Pastor and Teacher the Pontiff of Rome; and that thus sincerely united to us by the indissoluble bonds of one faith and one charity, they may with us, by the practice of good works, render glory to the most Holy Unity, and likewise honour Thee, O Virgin Mother of God, full of grace, now and for ever. Amen.

His Holiness Pope Pius IX., with the special intention of encouraging this "Association of Prayer" deigned by two Briefs dated Sept. 2nd, 1862, and June 11th, 1869, to confirm, grant anew, and extend to every faithful translation of the above prayer the Indulgences which had been attached to the original Italian. These are, 1. An Indulgence of 300 days for every time the said prayer is recited. 2. A Plenary Indulgence to those who, having recited it for a whole month, and having confessed and received Holy communion, shall pray for the intentions of the Sovereign Pontiff. These Indulgences are applicable to the holy souls in purgatory.

IV.

ANOTHER PRAYER TO MARY IMMACULATE, ENTIRELY COMPOSED OF TEXTS TAKEN FROM THE GREEK-SLAVONIAN LITURGY.

Summam habentes fiduciam Full of confidence in Thee, O in Te, Deipara semper Virgo, Mother of God and Ever-Virgin, simul cum sejunctis a nobis fratribus, together with our separated brethren we honour in thy Conception the foundation of salutis, Fundamentum veneramur salutis,

* We need hardly remark that the "Infallible guidance of the Pontiff of Rome," (la condotta infallibile del Romano Pontifice), does by no means imply His being infallible except in His teaching, and only when He teaches the universal Church ex cathedra. See what we have said in Ch. IV. of The Pope of Rome, etc., and the extracts from the work of Gregory XVI. (Il trionfo della Santa Sede), given in the additional notes, to which we might add numerous declarations of the Popes themselves.

No one, we hope, will make a difficulty about this expression used in the prayer. We employ every day propositions like these: he is a sure guide; you cannot err if you do what he tells you; he cannot lead you astray, etc. Are not these and other similar expressions synonymous of infallible guidance? If, moreover, the Head of the Church, appointed by God Himself, is not a sure or infallible guide to heaven, we do not see how to find any such elsewhere.

gratiæ basim, speique nostræ fulcimentum. Exaudi, O Maria, preces quas pro his fratribus fundimus qui, una nobiscum, Te totam sanctam, Te Arbitram donorum Dei, Te omnium vocant conciliatricem bonorum. Effice, ut perspicientes aliquando divinam Petri auctoritatem quem ipsi dicunt fundamentum Ecclesiæ, supremum Apostolorum fundamentum, Regni Cælorum clavigerum, inconcussam dogmatum basim, non amplius abnuant auctoritatem Romani Pontificis quem, vel ipsi, in persona Magni Leonis, suum ipsorum nuncupant Pastorem, hæredem throni et primatus Petri, caput denique Ecclesiæ. Amen.

tion, the basis of grace and the stay of our hope. Listen favourably, O Mary, to the prayer which we offer up to Thee for these our brethren who, with us, address Thee as "All holy, Arbitrator of the gifts of God," and "Her by whom we obtain all good." Grant that, acknowledging at last the divine authority of that Peter, whom they themselves designate "the foundation of the Church, supreme foundation of the Apostles, Bearer of the keys of the kingdom of Heaven, indestructible basis of dogmas," they may soon return to the obedience of the Roman Pontiff, whom, in the person of the great St. Leo, they call "their own Pastor, Inheritor of the throne and primacy of Peter, and Head of the Church." Amen.

---

V.

THE SAME PRAYER WITH THE CORRESPONDING LITURGICAL TEXTS.

Full of confidence in Thee, O Mother of God and Ever-Virgin.
—Gr. Θεοτόκος, Ἀειπαρθένος, passim.

We honour in thy Conception the foundation of salvation, the basis of grace and the stay of our hope. Gr. Κρητις ὑπεστήρικται τῆς σωτηρίας, καὶ βάσις τῆς χάριτος, ἡ τῆς Παρθένου σύλληψις, ἐν ᾗ ὑπερείδεται τῶν γηγενῶν ἡ ἐλπίς μέλλει. Office of the Conception (active) of St. Anne, 9 of December. The Μηναῖον ed. Venice 1845, reads: 'Ἐν ᾗ ὑπὲρ ἔννοιαν γεννήσεται τῶν γηγενῶν ἡ ἐλπίς. (In quâ præter cogitationem gignetur terrigenarum spes.) T. XII., p. 77.

To prevent these liturgical expressions being misunderstood, let it be remarked that the Redemption is here compared to an edifice which had its beginning in Mary's Conception. Since in the plan of Redemption, as chosen, decreed and carried into execution by God, the Redeemer ought to be the son of a woman. Her appearance on earth must necessarily precede that of the Redeemer born of Her. Mary's Conception has then been the first act in the Holy Drama of the Incarnation; the effectual beginning in the work of our Redemption; the foundation and basis in the edifice of salvation and grace. And, as the hope of seeing a long-desired edifice finally built up, is greatly strengthened by the fact of the foundations being actually laid down, thus also men's hope in the coming Redeemer could not but find a stay or support in the fact of Mary's first appearance on earth, in other words, in the Conception of Mary.

Listen favourably, O Mary, to the prayer which we offer up to Thee, for these our brethren who, with us address Thee as "All holy."—Gr. Παναγία, πάναγνος, ἀμίαντος, ἄχραντος, πανάχραντος, ἄμωμος, πανάμωμος, ὑπεράμωμος, &c., &c., passim.

It might indeed be said that a special language has been created by the Greek Fathers and Hymnographers to express their feelings towards Mary; at any rate, all the riches of the Greek language have been largely employed to pay homage to Her.

"Arbiter of the gifts of God," and "Her by whom we obtain all good."—Gr. Ὑπερχυθεῖσα ἡ χάρις τῆς Χριστοῦ εὐσπλαγχνίας εἰς πάντας τοὺς ἀνθρώπους θαυμάσιως σε μεσιτείαν παρέσχετο τῶν αὐτοῦ ὀντομάτων, τὴν πρόξενον πάντων τῶν καλῶν. Office of the Vigil of the Conception of St. Anne; Dec. 8. Θεοτοκίον after the Ode IX. Μηναῖον ed. Ven. p. 69.

These expressions, let us remark by the way, should prove to Protestants desirous to bring about a union with the Greek Orthodox Church, that their feelings towards Mary and their anxiety, lest devotion to Mary might be injurious to Her Son, create an insurmountable obstacle to their plans of union. We beg to refer for this point to Dr. Newman's letter to Dr. Pusey on the subject of the Catholics' devotion to Mary. What Dr. Newman says, we had already remarked ourselves when perusing the liturgical books of the Greek Orthodox Church. Let us only add here, that what might be termed the climax of Catholic devotion to Mary as expressed in the formula, Omnipotentia supplex, or in the verse:

"Quod Deus imperio Tu prece, Virgo, potes"

is to be met with, we venture to say, continually in the Greek Slavonian liturgy and without the corrective of "supplex" and "prece." More practical than Protestants, was assuredly F. Schouvaloff when he saluted in the devotion to Mary "the bond which shall unite the Catholic with the Greek-Russian Church." (See The Pope of Rome, etc., p. 178.) We hope that another and most effectual bond will also be the real presence of Jesus Christ in the Sacrament of His love. Let, then, all those who are desirous to co-operate in the reunion of the Churches have a true—strictly dogmatical, yet affectionate—devotion to our Lord in the Blessed Sacrament and to Mary, and do all in their power to promote the devotion to both.

Finally, it will perhaps not be inopportune to remind here Anglicans of the 42nd of the Tracts for the Times; its title is: Protestantism and Churches in the East. If it be reprinted, recent events will probably invest the publication with an interest of actuality.

"Grant that acknowledging at last the divine authority of that Peter, whom they themselves designate 'The foundation of the Church, supreme foundation of the Apostles, Bearer of the keys of the kingdom of Heaven,' indestructible basis of dogmas."—Gr. Ἡ κρηπίς τῆς Ἐκκλησίας;—ἡ κορυφαία κρηπίς τῶν Αποστόλων;—κλειδοῦχος τῆς οὐρανῶν βασιλείας;—δογματῶν βάσις ἀσειστος. Offices of St. Peter's Chains, Jan. 16, and of St. Peter and Paul, June 30.

In a special Essay, La primauté de St. Pierre prouvée par les titres que lui donne l'Eglise Russe dans sa liturgie. Paris, Palmé, 1867, we have collected and critically discussed the principal testimonies of the Greek-Russian liturgy in favour of the Supremacy of St. Peter over the Apostles and the whole Church. (See for the quoted expressions, p. 49—59, 78—81).*

They may soon return to the obedience of the Roman Pontiff whom, in the person of the great St. Leo, they call "their own Pastor."—Gr. Ὑπὲρ τῆς ποιμνῆς ΣΟΥ τὸν Δεσπότην ἐκτενῶς καὶ ἀνυπεύχως. . . . Αἰτοῦμεν Σε ὡς Ποιμένα καὶ Διδάσκαλον τὴν εἰρήνην τῷ κόσμῳ αἰτήσασθαι. Office of St. Leo, Pope of Rome, Febr. 18. Μην. ed. Ven. p. 107, 102.

"Inheritor of the throne and primacy of Peter." Gr. Ὁ Πέτρον νῦν τοῦ σεπτοῦ διάδοχος, καὶ τὴν τοῦτου προεδρείαν πλουτήσας. Ib. Μην. p. 104.

And "Head of the Church."

This expression is not to be found in the printed Greek Menologia; it exists, however, in the Slavonian (glava Tserkvi). (See The Pope of Rome, p. 78—79.) The author of a Russian pamphlet headed Kto prav? (Who is right?) Leipzig, Wolff. Gerhard, 1861, states that he had found it in several Greek manuscripts. At any rate, this expression was, beyond any doubt, employed in the ancient Greek liturgy, as surely the Russians have not invented it themselves. Rev. Father Cozza thus quotes the original Greek: Τὶ σε ὀνομάσω Θεόπνευστε; κεφαλὴν τῆς ὁρθοδόξου Ἐκκλησίας Χριστοῦ; . . . (De Romani Pontificis auctoritate doctrinali testimonia liturgica Ecclesiae graecae, selecta a JOSEPHO COZZA-LUZI, Monacho Ord. Scti. Basilii M. Romae typ. de Prop. fide, 1870, p. 16, note 15.

* We beg to quote here the following index, taken from p. 101,—

"Principaux titres donnés par l'Eglise Russe à Saint Pierre. 1 Pierre (roc, πέτρα).—2 Pierre (id.) inconfusable.—3 Pierre (id.) de l'Eglise.—4 La pierre (id.) de la foi.—5 Fondement (base fondamentale, κρηπίς).—6 Fondement (id.) de la foi.—7 Le fondement (id.) de l'Eglise.—8 Fondement (id.) des Apôtres.—9 Le suprême fondement (id.) des Apôtres.—10 Base inébranlable des dogmes.—11 Siège de la foi.—12 Le premier des Apôtres.—13 Le suprême, par excellence.—14 Le suprême des disciples.—15 Le suprême des Apôtres.—16 Le plus que suprême des Apôtres.—17 Premier-plus que suprême.—18 Le divin coryphée.—19 Coryphée des Apôtres.—20 Le prototrône, par excellence.—21 Le prototrône des disciples.—22 Prototrône des Apôtres.—23 Préposé à l'Eglise.—24 Président de l'Eglise.—25 Président des Apôtres.—26 Le plus ancien du collège des disciples.—27. Premier en rang du collège des Apôtres.—28 Le choisi entre tous les disciples.—29 Le plus excellent.—30 Le meilleur. (gr. choisi entre tous).—31 Le chef des théologiens.—32 Premier chef des Apôtres.—33 Pasteur établi par le Christ.—34 Pasteur de tous les Apôtres, établi par le Seigneur.—35 Commencement des chrétiens.—36 Commencement de l'orthodoxie.—37 Docteur des Apôtres.—38 Le guide (dux) des Apôtres.—39 Le temple de Dieu.—40 Fondation de l'Eglise.—41 Tresor assuré (gr. sûr dispensateur) du royaume.—Porte-clefs de la grâce.—43 Porte-clefs du royaume des cieux.

"Autres titres qui se trouvent dans le grec. 44 Base de l'Eglise (βάσις τῆς Ἐκκλησίας).—45. Le surintendant du Fils (de Dieu) (ὁ ἐπίσκοπος τοῦ Υἱοῦ). (Θεοῦ).—46 Chef des pasteurs (ἀρχιεπίσκοπος)."

VI.

APPROBATIONS GRANTED TO THIS "ASSOCIATION OF PRAYERS"
BY ENGLISH BISHOPS.

1.

LETTER OF THE PRESENT CARDINAL ARCHBISHOP OF WEST-MINSTER.

8, York Place, Portman Square, London, W.
Nov. 7, 1866.

Rev and dear Father,

I have the greatest pleasure in giving my approbation to the Association of Prayers for the Conversion of the Oriental Schismatics, and especially of the Russians and Greeks to the Catholic Faith and Unity, and in granting Forty Days' Indulgence to all who shall co-operate with you in spreading the Association in the Diocese of Westminster, by reciting the Prayer of our Immaculate Mother with that intention.*

Be so good as to enrol my name in the Association. At this time, when the thought and desire of union is so active in the mind of men, I rejoice to see so truly and purely Catholic an Association extending in the midst of us. I am glad, also, to see it introduced among us by a spiritual son of the B. Alessandro Sauli, the friend of S. Charles; this gives us the outline of the true re-union of Christendom on the basis of Trent, in submission to the Sovereign Pontiff, and under the intercession of the Most Blessed and Immaculate Mother of God. I heartily pray that God may bless you and your work, and

Remain,

Rev. and dear Father,

Your affectionate Servant in Christ,

✠ HENRY EDWARD,
Archbishop of Westminster.

The Rev. F. Tondini, of the Congregation of the Fathers Barnabites.

2.

APPROBATION OF THE LATE BISHOP OF SOUTHWARK.

London, St. George's, Nov. 8, 1866.

We grant 40 days Indulgence to the faithful reciting an Ave in our Diocese for the return of the Oriental and Greek Schismatics to the obedience of the Holy See.

✠ THOMAS GRANT.

---

* See this prayer above, p. 198, No. III.

3.

LETTER OF THE BISHOP OF SHREWSBURY.

Belmont, Shrewsbury.

Dec. 5, 1871.

Dear F. Tondini,

The object of your Association is so excellent, and the approval which it has received is of so distinguished a character, that I cannot hesitate for a moment to add my name to the list of those who have sanctioned its establishment in their respective Dioceses.

Wishing it every success, and begging that a special blessing may attend its promoters,

I am,

Yours faithfully in Christ,

✠ J. BROWN,

BISHOP OF SHREWSBURY.

4.

EXTRACT FROM A LETTER OF THE BISHOP OF NORTHAMPTON.

Northampton, Jan. 14, 1872.

. . . . I beg now to say that I entirely approve of the means which you desire to adopt for the return of the Oriental Church to the one fold.

Wishing you every blessing,

I remain,

Yours very truly in Christ,

✠ FR. K. AMHERST,

BISHOP OF NORTHAMPTON.

5.

APPROBATION OF THE BISHOP OF CLIFTON.

His Lordship the Hon. and Right Rev. Joseph Hugh Clifford, Bishop of Clifton, kindly informed us, through the late Mgr. Bonomi, that "He was most happy to accede to our wishes, and allow his name to appear as a patron of the Association of prayers." (Letter dated Bishop's House, Clifton, 23 Jan., 1872.)

6.

LETTER OF THE BISHOP OF BEVERLEY,

(translated from the Italian).

Springfield House, Little Woodhouse, Leeds.

March 16, 1875.

Dear Rev. Father,

Your works and various writings, such as have lately appeared in the New Catholic World,* fill me with the deepest interest in the future of the Church in Russia, for the welfare and progress of which I have the greatest desire.

---

* The Future of the Russian Church, in the New Catholic World, of New York, Jan., Feb., March, April, 1875.

I agree with you in hoping that the day of mercy is approaching for that empire and its large population. I give, indeed most heartily, my approbation to the Association of prayers which you promote, and consider it my duty to unite myself with it.

I remain,

Dear Reverend Father,

Yours very truly,

✠ ROBERT, BISHOP OF BEVERLEY.

7.

LETTER OF THE BISHOP OF NOTTINGHAM.

April 30, 1875.

Dear Rev. Father,

I have read with much pleasure the Brief of His Holiness granting a plenary Indulgence, on the usual conditions, to those who join in the pious exercise instituted by your Father General for the conversion of the Schismatic Greeks. Desiring that my flock may participate in so excellent a work, and in the benefit of the Indulgences so liberally attached to it, I beg of you to ask the Father General, in my name, to be so good as to designate all the Churches of my Diocese as Churches in which the said Indulgences may be gained.

The Holy Father having sanctioned your good work of prayers for the conversion of the Schismatic Greeks, I most heartily recommend it to the faithful of my Diocese.

I remain, dear Rev. Father,

Yours very faithfully,

✠ EDWARD,

BISHOP OF NOTTINGHAM.

N.B.—In compliance with the desire expressed in this letter, we have communicated to his Lordship the following Declaration just received from our General Father, and which concerns all Churches and all Dioceses outside of Italy.

VII.

DECLARATION OF THE GENERAL FATHER OF THE BARNABITES FOR FACILITATING THE SPREADING OF THIS "ASSOCIATION OF PRAYERS."

Utentes facultatibus in Apostolico Brevis diei 30 Aprilis anni 1872, Nobis benigne tributis, simul et cupientes ut pia Pre-

"Making use of the faculties graciously granted to us by the Apostolic Brief dated April 30, 1872, and wishing that the

cum sodalitas, in honorem Beatæ Virginis Immaculatæ pro reditu ECCLESIAE GRÆCO-RUTHENÆ ad Catholicam unitatem, a SS. Domino nostro Pio PP. IX. pluribus jam Indulgentiis ditata, fidelibusque enixe commendata, facilius institui possit, declaramus :

Ecclesias singulas extra Italiam, in quibus, de Ordinariorum licentia, pium instituatur Exercitium in dicto Brevi memoratum (quodque Parisiis in Ecclesia nostra primo fit cujusque mensis Sabbato), sacrosanctum videlicet Missæ Sacrificium celebratum et applicatum pro reditu Ecclesiæ Græco-Ruthenæ ad Catholicam unitatem, eo ipso frui communicatione Indulgentiarum in eodem Brevi concessarum, quin aliâ ad hoc indigeant facultate. Omnes itaque, utriusque sexus Christiani fideles qui, semel in mense die ab Ordinario prescripta et in festo Conceptionis Immaculatæ Beatæ Mariæ Virginis, prefato pio Exercitio seu Missæ in dictis Ecclesiis celebratæ interfuerint, dummodo vere pœnitentes et confessi ac sacra Communione refecti (vel in ipsa Missa communicantes) aliquantulum ibi juxta mentem Romani Pontificis oraverint, toties quoties id præstiterint, Plenariam Indulgentiam vel pro se, vel pro animabus in Purgatorio detentis lucrari poterunt. Nomina vero Ecclesiarum quæ, modo prædicto et de Ordinariorum consensu, pium istud Exercitium adoptaverint, transmitti quamprimum debe-

"pious Association of prayers in "honour of Mary Immaculate
"for the return of the GREEK-
"RUSSIAN CHURCH to Catholic
"unity, which His Holiness Pope
"Pius IX. has more than once
"enriched with Indulgences and
"warmly recommended to the "faithful, be more easily estab"lished, we declare as follows :

"All Churches, outside of "Italy, in which, with the consent "of the local Bishop, shall be "established the pious exercise
"alluded to in the above-men"tioned Brief, (and which in our "Church at Paris is practised on "the first Saturday of every "month), that is the most Holy "Sacrifice of the Mass offered and "applied for the return of the "GREEK-RUSSIAN CHURCH to "Catholic unity, shall imme"diately enjoy the communica"tion of the Indulgences granted
"in the same Brief. Conse"quently, all the faithful of both "sexes who—once a month on "the day appointed by the local "Bishop and on the feast of the "Immaculate Conception of "Mary—assist at the said pious "exercise or Mass celebrated in "the above-mentioned Churches,
"provided that truly repentant,
"and having confessed and re"ceived holy communion (or re"ceiving it at this Mass), they "pray there for a while for the "intentions of the Roman Pon-"tiff, can gain each time that "they perform all this, a Plenary "Indulgence either for them"selves or for the souls of Pur"gatory. The names of the "Churches which in the way
"said above, and with the con"sent of the local Bishop, shall "have adopted the pious exer"cise, must be soon transmitt

bunt vel Romam ad Præpositum Generalem Congregationis Barnabitarum, vel ad Superiorem ejusdem Congregationis in Gallia, Parisiis degentem (64 Rue de Monceau). "either to the General Father of the Congregation of the Barnabites at Rome, or to the Superior of the same Congregation in France, residing at Paris (64 Rue de Monceau)."

Datum Romæ, die 18 Maii anni 1875. Given at Rome, the 18th of May, 1875.

J.-M. ALBINI, J.-M. ALBINI, Congregationis Cler. Reg. Barnabitarum Præpositus Generalis. General Superior of the Regular Clerks, Barnabites.

It follows from this Declaration that, outside of Italy, the communication of the Plenary Indulgences granted in the Brief of April 30, 1872, is no longer attached to the reception of the Diploma given above (No. II., p. 197).

Moreover, as the prescription limiting the number of the Plenary Indulgences concerns the Churches in which they may be gained, and not the faithful, these may gain every month and on the feast of the Immaculate Conception of Mary, as many Plenary Indulgences applicable to the souls of Purgatory, as there are Masses said in the Churches and on the days appointed by the local Bishop, for the return of the Greek-Russian Church to Catholic unity, at which they may be able to assist.

Finally, the Bishops are henceforth entitled, once for all and without there needing any further authorisation, to designate themselves ALL the Churches of their Dioceses as Churches in which the said Indulgences may be gained.

---

The approbations granted to this "Association of Prayers" by the Bishops of other countries will be found in the quoted Essay: La prière et l'appui du St. Siège et de l'Episcopat dans l'œuvre de la réunion des Eglises.—Notice historique sur l'Association de prières, etc. (Paris, Plon, 1875.)

We shall be glad to collect and publish from time to time all other approbations and encouragements, which their Lordships the Bishops of all countries may deem expedient to add to those already granted.

Paris, 64, Rue de Monceau, May 28, 1875.

* * These Documents concerning the "Association of Prayers" may also be had separately, at Mr. Washbourne's, 18, Paternoster Row, London.

